When every precaution had been taken the ranger led-the freshly scrubbed, seoured and transformed fugitive to his cabin.

"Why, man, you're fit for the state legislature," he exclaimed as they came into the full light. "My clothes don't precisely meet every demand you make upon them, but they give you an air of command. HALIFAX, N. S., TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 10, 1913.

There were tears in Wetherford's eyes as he said: "You cannot realize what this clean, warm uniform means to me. For nine years I wore the prison stripes. It is ten years since I was dressed like a man."
"You need not worry about food or shelter for the present," replied Cavanagh genity. "Grub is not costly here, and house rent is less than nominal, so make yourself at home and get strong."

want to do something. I want to re-deem myself in some way. I don't want my girl to know who I am, but I'd like to win her respect. I can't be what you say she thinks I was, but if 1 had a chance I might show my-self a man again. I wouldn't mind seir a man again. I wouldn't mind Lize knowing that I am alive. It might be a comfort to her. But I don't want even her to be told till I can go to her in my own duds."
"She's pretty sick," said Cavanagh. "I-telephoned Lee Virginia last night, and if you wish you may ride down with me-tomorrow and see her."

The old man fell a-tremble. "I daren't do that. I can't bear to tell.

"She peedn't know. I will tell her you've been out of your mind. I'll say anything you wish. You can go to her in the clothes you have on if you like. She will not recognize you as the pris-oner I held the other night. You can have your beard trimmed, and not even the justice will know you." even the justice will know you."
All reserve had vanished out of the convict's heart, and with choking voice he thanked his young host. "I'll never be a burden to you," he deciared in a firmer yolee. "And if my lung holds out I'll show you I'm not the total loco that I 'pear to be."

CHAPTER XVI. CAVANAGH FOLLOWS HIS CHIEF.

T breakfast next morning Cava-nagh said: "I must ride back and take some bread to the dog. I can't go away and leave him there without saying hello."
"Let me do that," suggested Wetherford. "I'm afraid to go down to the ford. "I'm afraid to go down to the Fork. I reckon I'd better go back and tend the sheep till Gregg sends one up to take my place." "That might be too late to see Lize

Ross rode off up the trail to see how the dog and his flock were faring. He had not gone far when he heard the tinkle of the bells and the murmur of the lambs, and a few moments later the collie came toward him with the air of a boy who, having assumed to disregard the orders of his master, ex-pects a scolding. He plainly said: T've brought my sheep to you because country and my wife and child I'd be safe. I said I'd be willing to go back to the pen if necessary, but I'm not. I can't do it. I'd die there. You must was lonesome. Please forgive me." Cavanagh called to him cheerily and ossed him a piece of bread, which he aught in his teeth, but did not swalow. On the contrary, he held it while caping for joy of the praise he heard save me for my girl's sake." n his new found master's voice.

Turning the flock upward toward the higher peaks, the ranger commanded the collie to their heels and so, having redeemed his promise, rode back to the redeemed his promise, rode back to the cabin, where he found Wetherford saddled and ready for his momentum trip to the valley. He had shaved away his gray beard, and had Ross been unprepared for these changes he would have been puzzled to account for this decidedly military figure sitting statusquely on his row, before the door. esquely on his pony before the door.
"You can prove an alibi," he called as he drew near. "Gregg himself would ever recognize you now." Wetherford was in no mood for tok-

"I know," said he, "that Lize is old and wrinkled, for I've seen her, but all the same I cap't realize it. That heavy set woman down there is not Lize. My Lize is slim and straight. This woman whom you know has stolen her name and face, that's all. I can't explain exactly what I feel, but Lee Virginia means more to me now than Lize." "I think I understand you," said Cavanagh, with sympathy in his voice. The nearer Wetherford came to the ctual meeting with his wife the more actual meeting with his wife the more he shook. At last he stopped in the road. "I don't believe I can do it." he declared. "I'll be like a ghost to her. What's the use of it? She'il only be worried by my story. I reckon I'd better keep dark to everybody. Let me so hack. I'm plum scared cold." go back. I'm plum scared cold." While still he argued two men on orseback rounded a sharp turn in the trail and came face to face with the ranger. Wetherford's face went uddenly gray. "There's the deputy!"

"Keep quiet. I'll do the talking," commanded Cavanagh, who was intant in his determination to shield the "Good morning, gentlemen." he called cheerily. "You're abroad early!"

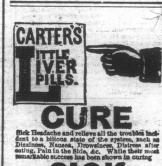

The man in front was the deputy sheriff of the county; his companion was a stranger.

"That was a borrible mess you stum-bled on over on Deer creek," the dep-"It certainly was. Have any arrests "Not yet, but we're on a clew. This is Marshal Haines of Dallas, Mr. Cavanagh," pursued the deputy. The two men nodded in token of the introducwants to see him mighty bad. He's an escaped convict with a bad record."

"Is that so?" exclaimed Cavanagh. "I thought he seemed a bit gun ahy."
"The last seen of him was when Sam Gregg sent him up to herd sheep. I think he was mixed up in that tilling myself—him and Balkard—and we're going up to get some track of him. Didn't turn up at your seation, did he?"

"Yes; he came by some days ago, on his way, so he said, to relieve that sick Basque, Ambro. I went up a couple of days ago and found the Basque dead and the old man gone. I buried the herder the best I could, and

The deputy mused: "He may be hanging round some of the lumber camps. I reckon we had better go up and look the ground over anyhow. Wo might just chance to overfaul him."

"He may have pulled out over the range," suggested the ranges. "Any-how, it's a long way up there, and how, it's a long way up there, and you'll probably have to camp at my place tonight. You'll find the key hanging over the door. Go in and make yourself comfortable."

The deputy thanked him and was about to ride on when Chrungh added: "I burned that Basque's tent and bedding for fear of contagion. His outfit was worthless anyhow. You'll find the sheep just above my cabin and the horse in my corral."

"The old man didn't take the horse, eh? Well, that settles it; he's sure at "All the same, I'm scared. That man Haines had his eyes on me every minute. He saw right through me. They'll get me, and they'll charge me up with that thiling."

"No, they won't, I tell you," insisted the ranger. "Haines suspected nothing. I had his eye. He never saw you before and has nothing but a description to go by, so cheer up. Your malform and your position with me will make you safe—perfectly safe. They'll find the Basque's camp burned and the sheep in charge of the dog, and they'll fancy that you have skipped across the range. But see here, old man," and he turned on him sharply, "you didn't tell me the whole truth." replied the fugitive. "But I will now. replied the fugitive. "But I will now, I was in for a life sentence, I was desperate for the open air and home-sick for the mountains, and I struck down one of the guards. I was willing to do anything to get out. I thought if I could get back to this

"Now, listen," he said. "I'm going to shield you on account of your work for that poor shepherd and for your daughter's sake. It's my dairy to apprehend you of could be said. I'm going to protect you. The safest thing for you to do is to go back to my cabin. Ride slow, so as not to get there till they're gone. They'll ride over to the sawmill without doubt. If they come back this way remember that the deputy saw you only as a ragged old man with a long beard and that Haines has nothing but a printed description to go by. There's no use trying to fiee. You are a marked man in that uniform, and you are safer right here with me than any where else this side of Chicago. Haines is likely to cross the divide in the belief that you have gone that way, and if he does you have no one way, and if he does you have no one but the deputy to deal with."

He succeeded at last in completely rousing the older man's courage.

Wetherford rose to meet his opportunity. "I'll do it," he said firmly.

"That's the talk!" exclaimed Cavanagh to encourage him. "You can throw them off the track this time, and when I come heat tomperson I'll bring. when I come back tomorrow I'll bring some other clothing for you, and then we'll plan some kind of scheme that will get you out of the country. I'll not let them make a scapegoat of you. The ranger watched the fugitive as he started back over the trail in this desperate defiance of his pursuers with far less confidence in the outcome than he had put into words, "All depends on Wetherford himself.

If his nerve does not fail him, if they take the uniform for granted and do not carry the matter to the supervisor, we will pull the plan through." And in this hope he rode away down the trail with bent head, for all this bore heavily upon his relationship to the girl waiting for him in the valley. He had thought Lize a burden, a social disability, but a convict father now made the mother's faults of small ac-
