(Special to Daily News.) OTTAWA, Oct. 30. Yesterday the Indian Chief Augustus and other Indians, of Garden River reserve, came to Ottawa, accompanied by J. W. Scott, brother of the Secretary of State, to transfer their reserve to the Government for a certain consideration. It is said that Mr. Scott and another Brit, knowing that a valuable mine was situated on the land, induced them to transfer it, with the understanding that they, Scott and partner, were to purchase it from the Government at a certain price. The transfer was made and papers drawn up and signed. Afterwards the reserve was handed over to Scott and partner, and thus the Indian reserve job stands.

A trader of Garden River, a friend of the Indians, discovered the mine some time ago and was negotiating with the tribe for a lease of it when Scott stepped in, and, with the influence of his Cabinet relative, secured it.

The paragraph relating to a Portland policeman, in which Dennis Boyce was said to have charged one of them with having taken $1.50 on the pretence of keeping Boyce's name out of the papers, has created quite a flutter in police circles. Capt. Jones, resolved on an investigation, came to the city and got Boyce over to Portland, and then locked him up on charges of drunkenness and slander. Representatives of the papers in which the paragraph appeared, and policemen of the city, were summoned as witnesses on the latter charge. E. R. Gregory, Esq., appeared for the police force, and Mr. John Kerr for the prisoner. The charge of drunkenness was denied, and Mr. Kerr made a long string of objections. He wanted to know, on behalf of the Town of Portland, if Jones had any right to arrest a man in the City of St. John. The man, although never sober, was never drunk enough to be arrested. It was an outrage, and he would like to see Jones smart for it. The magistrate scolded his ruffled spirits, which seemed to be at the boiling point, by telling him that he intended to have a thorough investigation of the charge of slander. Mr. Kerr might object as much as he liked. The force had been assembled, and he was going to learn the truth of the report. As for the arrest it was not made in the city. Jones went to the city, met Boyce, spoke to him of the report, and asked him to go to Portland and point out the man. At that time he was in a half-mad state, and after he got over, he became so drunk that it was necessary to lock him up. Mr. Tapley then called upon Boyce to make any statement he wished, but, acting on Mr. Kerr's advice, he refused to say a word. Policeman Briggs was called, and Mr. Kerr wished his evidence taken to objection. The Magistrate told him he might have it taken any way he wanted, and could call the inquiry extra-judicial if he liked. Briggs, under oath, stated that Boyce had told him the story just as it was published. Mr. Kerr was asked if he had any questions to ask, and said, "No, Your Honor, not a bit," and expressed the opinion that it was very trivial. The Magistrate related the fable of the boys and the ox for his benefit, which seemed to put him in better humor. Justice Tapley then called upon Boyce for a statement, advising him to take "no bad advice from Mr. Kerr." Boyce then said he thought his brother paid the money, and that he told Briggs. He didn't think it any harm, and supposed his brother would do it to keep his name out. The amount was made $1.50 because he heard somebody mention that sum at the time. The Magistrate explained the effect of making such charges, the public reading the charge and having no evidence opposed to it. He thought it was just a piece of petty spite on Boyce's part, and Mr. Kerr must feel proud of his client. Kerr said he had had many more respectable clients than old Dennis Boyce. The Magistrate told him he did not doubt it, and advised Boyce to be more cautious in future, to go home and learn not to lie, to report and be truthful. He quoted from Shakespeare, "He who steals my purse," &c., and expressed his opinion that a liar was the veriest reptile that ever lived. He would rather meet the highway robber than the man who would by slander steal him in the dark. Boyce then made an open retraction of his statement and was discharged.

Investigation of the Charge against a Portland Policeman.

The paragraph relating to a Portland policeman, in which Dennis Boyce was said to have charged one of them with having taken $1.50 on the pretence of keeping Boyce's name out of the papers, has created quite a flutter in police circles.

Capt. Jones, resolved on an investigation, came to the city and got Boyce over to Portland, and then locked him up on charges of drunkenness and slander.

Representatives of the papers in which the paragraph appeared, and policemen of the city, were summoned as witnesses on the latter charge.

E. R. Gregory, Esq., appeared for the police force, and Mr. John Kerr for the prisoner.

The charge of drunkenness was denied, and Mr. Kerr made a long string of objections.

He wanted to know, on behalf of the Town of Portland, if Jones had any right to arrest a man in the City of St. John.

The man, although never sober, was never drunk enough to be arrested.

It was an outrage, and he would like to see Jones smart for it.

The magistrate scolded his ruffled spirits, which seemed to be at the boiling point, by telling him that he intended to have a thorough investigation of the charge of slander.

Mr. Kerr might object as much as he liked. The force had been assembled, and he was going to learn the truth of the report.

As for the arrest it was not made in the city. Jones went to the city, met Boyce, spoke to him of the report, and asked him to go to Portland and point out the man.

At that time he was in a half-mad state, and after he got over, he became so drunk that it was necessary to lock him up.

Mr. Tapley then called upon Boyce to make any statement he wished, but, acting on Mr. Kerr's advice, he refused to say a word.

Policeman Briggs was called, and Mr. Kerr wished his evidence taken to objection.

The Magistrate told him he might have it taken any way he wanted, and could call the inquiry extra-judicial if he liked.

Briggs, under oath, stated that Boyce had told him the story just as it was published.

Mr. Kerr was asked if he had any questions to ask, and said, "No, Your Honor, not a bit," and expressed the opinion that it was very trivial. The Magistrate related the fable of the boys and the ox for his benefit, which seemed to put him in better humor.

Justice Tapley then called upon Boyce for a statement, advising him to take "no bad advice from Mr. Kerr." Boyce then said he thought his brother paid the money, and that he told Briggs.

He didn't think it any harm, and supposed his brother would do it to keep his name out. The amount was made $1.50 because he heard somebody mention that sum at the time.

The Magistrate explained the effect of making such charges, the public reading the charge and having no evidence opposed to it. He thought it was just a piece of petty spite on Boyce's part, and Mr. Kerr must feel proud of his client.

Kerr said he had had many more respectable clients than old Dennis Boyce. The Magistrate told him he did not doubt it, and advised Boyce to be more cautious in future, to go home and learn not to lie, to report and be truthful.

He quoted from Shakespeare, "He who steals my purse," &c., and expressed his opinion that a liar was the veriest reptile that ever lived.

He would rather meet the highway robber than the man who would by slander steal him in the dark. Boyce then made an open retraction of his statement and was discharged.
