

Excalibur — Jon Young

"Both students and professors must attempt to proceed up the iron ladder of academic ascent. Professors must publish, be assiduous on committee work; students must write essays that discourage as much as intrigue, study for exams that frighten as much as stimulate. But if both are dedicated to knowledge this work can lead to fulfillment and it can be leavened and complemented by the college system. The value gained in more than occasional participation in college life is different from that gained on the 'iron ladder'."

former master of Winter's College
