Man Known to History as "The Great harl of Cork."

Richard Boyle, known to history as "The Great Earl of Cork," was born a commoner at Canterbury, October 3, 1566. Having lost 'his parents and being unable to prosecute his studies on the slender come accruing to a Clerkship in the Court of Exchequer, he went to Ire-land in search of a fortune. Here he married a lady who, presently dying, left him an estate worth £500 a year and a position of influence which, as he employed it, soon raised against him a host of enemies and detractors. The rebellion of Munster reduced him again to poverty, but the had gained the favor of Queen Elizabeth in the meantime judicious investment in Irish which he peopled with Protestant tenants, made him not only rich but a political figure of great importance in the troublous times that were to follow. His titles came from James I. and Charles I.,. to the latter of whom he gave spien-did return in his services when the great rebellion broke out in Ireland. Lismore, his principal seat, was turned into a fortress, his servants and tenants were armed and discinfined at his own expense in the royalist cause, and when all else failed his plate was melted into coin and placed at his master's disposal. Cromwell's significant compliment that "had there been an Earl of Cork in each county there would have been no rebellion" is perhaps the best evidence producible as to the important role filled by Boyle in the politics of his day.

The following story was evidently not told to illustrate ministerial dignity; but as an amusing anecdote of a great man who loved children, and shared their fun, it could hardly remain untold.

Dr. E. K. Cressey, of Brooklyn Hills, L. I., says that one day, when he was a small boy, his mother left the house, cautioning him and his brothers to be quiet and not romp while she was gone. There was a hair brush with which Mrs. Cressey was wont to punish violations of the domestic statutes when any such occurred, and the youngsters promised to be good. Presently Mr. Beecher arrived to make a call upon the Cresseys, and found no one to receive him but demure looking boys. A flash of anticipation came into his eyes as he joyously told his young hosts to prepare for the romp of their lives. 'But mamma told us we mustn't romp," protested the future doctor of philosophy. "I'll take all the responsibility," replied the preacher.

When Mrs. Cressey neared the house on her return she heard indi-cations of a small riot. Filled with indignation at this unheard-of re-bellion in her little republic, she rushed into the house, with words of rebuke trembling on her tongue. At the door she paused, petrified Henry Ward Beecher was flat on his back on the floor, with a parcel of young Indians apparently dancing a ghost dance on his prostrate form and emitting shrill yells. The spirit of the avenger immediately froze into silent consternation all the rebels except the arch insurgent. Climbing to his feet, the unabashed When a man offers you something for nothing it will pay you to walk around it by the furthest possible clergyman said: "Mrs. Cressey, I promised my friends here to take all the responsibility for this outbreak, and" (there he reached the hair brush and presented it to her with a Chesterfieldian bow) "I am ready to take whatever is due them. You may begin at once.'

But for once there was an infraction of the laws in the Cressey household that was unpunished. Mr. Beecher went unspanked.

His client, "Hat" Wheelock, had got into a quarrel with one "Pat" McDonald over a horse trade. The quarrel had gone so far that McDonald had made application to a magistrate to have Wheelock bound over to keep the peace, alleging that he had threatened to do him injury.

When the case was called, McDon ald testified to the circumstances un-der which Wheelock had threatened him. The cross-examination began.
"Now, Mr. McDonald," the lawyer said, "you declare that you are un der the fear of bodily harm?'

"I am, sorr."

"You are even afraid for your life?" "I am, sorr." "Then you freely admit that Hat

Wheelock can whip you, Pat McDon ald?" The question roused McDonald's rish" instantly.
"Hat Wheelock whip me? Nivver!"

"My wife was stricken with nervous prostration, which developed into total paralysis. We had hardly any hope of her recovery, but had heard of the great cures made by South American Nervine in cases of nervous troubles. We decided to try the treatment, and it was astonishing the results that followed the taking of three bottles—it worked wonders indeed. I feel I cannot speak too highly of this great remedy."
