The Introductory Text contains a brief Historical Essay, and Practical Hints on the Process of Painting—Oil, Tempera, and Wax Painting—Preparing the Design, and Transferring the same to the Walls or other Portions of a Building, and the Principles of Decorative Design and Colouring.

"Few probably are better fitted than Messrs. Audsley for the task of undertaking a work on this subject . . . much useful suggestion may be derived from these examples . . . the work will be of use in showing the charming and agreeable shades of a low tone of colour that may be employed. . . . As a book of reference to the Architect and decorative Artist the book fill up a gap in the office library."—Building News.
