

which to occupy them—and if the wealth of Christian people be consecrated to this service—the wilderness will soon blossom as the rose.

It is promised that Christ shall have the heathen for His inheritance, the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession, and it is our privilege to bear some part in the means by which Jehovah is developing the glorious future of the Kingdom of His dear son.

Prayer, labour and liberality are wisely conjoined in the resolution. It is only when men get near the Cross; in sympathy with the loving purposes of the Redeemer, that the wishes of the heart will flow out in this direction—then work for Jesus and proper liberality will naturally follow. "I have much pleasure in Seconding this Resolution."

After these eloquent, appropriate and telling addresses, the Collection was taken up—and which, to correspond with the impression made upon the meeting, must have reached a handsome figure.

The grateful feeling of the audience then found expression in the Doxology, after which the Pastor pronounced the Benediction, and the second Anniversary of the German Street Wesleyan Sabbath School Missionary Society became a happy event of the past.

H. P.
St. John N. B., April 3rd, 1871.

Circuit Intelligence.

AYLESFORD.—Bro. Taylor 3rd inst.—Two souls were converted to God last week at the west. One—the father of a family—a new family altar is erected. Meetings will be continued there this week.

ALBERTON CIRCUIT.—P. E. J.—Bro. Bigney writes 31st March 1871.—"You will be pleased to learn that God is reviving His work at Alberton. Some have recently been brought to Christ and others have evinced a desire to flee from the wrath to come" and to be saved from their sins. We are expecting to see greater things as a general religious feeling pervades the place."

CHARLOTTETOWN AND POWAL CIRCUIT.—Bro. H. J. Clarke writes March 30th 1871.—"I have just returned from Powal after labouring among a sorrowing people, for the last fortnight. Bro. Winterbotham has ceased from his labours, and it will be truly said of him that 'his works follow him.'"

I have visited 30 families in the circuit and they all manifest profound sorrow for the great loss they have sustained in the death of their dear ones. I met a class of young people in whom he had taken a great interest. It was quite affecting to hear them speak of their beloved pastor. I saw him a few hours after his death. I could not help thinking what a change in a few weeks and as I left the mission house, I felt instantly drawn to offer the prayer of David so teach me to number my days that I may apply my heart unto wisdom. Last Sunday evening we had a crowded congregation, three stood up to be prayed for, and one young man professed to find peace. I am glad to say that we are getting on well at the Free Church several others have found peace at the last few weeks. I have now thirty meeting in class. Mr. Milligan administered the sacrament to them last Sunday morning."

DORSET.—Bro. Giles, writes March 25th.—"Truly that was a good week, good men were better, and bad men were made good." After spending three weeks in special services, and just as we were about to close for another place God graciously visited us, and in one week we have had thirty-two stand up to tell what God has done for their souls, such clear evidences I never heard before, and such a work I never witnessed. The feeling sometimes was such as to make me sit down and weep, at times we could scarce hear one pray for cries of penitents and of those who had just received the assurance of acceptance. "All glory to God for that he has done."

FREDERICTON CIRCUIT.—Bro. Fulton writes April 1st, 1871.—"Christ will, doubtless, be glad to learn that Christ is again visiting us at this little village, Oromocto. He has long been 'as a stranger in the land'; so great a stranger, so seldom a visitant, that even His old friends had almost forgotten Him, and His name heard mentioned at all was spoken only in blasphemy."

We have deeply repented for having so slighted, neglected, and abused our best Friend our only 'Saviour in the time of trouble,' and to force 'Him to depart out of our coats'; and we are now heartily engaged in trying to win Him to return. Thanks be to His name, while, in a few evenings service we were assembled with one accord, in the place, where once He dwelt, seeking, weeping, praying for His return. He came, entered hearts out of which He had long since been driven by sin, and hearts, too, in which he found 'no room' on former visits.

General Intelligence.

Y. M. WESLEYAN INSTITUTE.—The adjourned annual Meeting of the Y. M. Wesleyan Institute was held at the Wesleyan Church last evening. The report of the executive committee was read and showed a membership of 120, being an increase of some 30 during the year. The report also showed that considerable work had been done by the Institute, and that great interest was taken by the members in its meetings, numbers of them contributing essays, and taking part in the debate. After some private business the election of officers took place, when the following gentlemen were elected.—President, W. B. McOut; Vice-President, Charles Longwood; Secretary, Dr. Treman; Asst. Secy., E. Sutcliffe; Treasurer, Andrew Hill.—Report.

NOVA SCOTIA ELECTIONS.—These it is understood will take place early next month; and doubtless there will be some common enough everywhere throughout the Province, in regard to these, although as yet there is very little apparent stir except in the city and county of Halifax. The candidates of the party now in power in the province for the Metropolitan County are Messrs. Garvie, Flinn and Archibald; and for the opposite party Messrs. Hill, Daly, and Geddes.

It will be seen from a card which appears in our advertising columns that the Hon. W. W. Chesley, Esq., of Bridgewater is a candidate for the County of Annapolis.

The Amherst Gazette reports that on Saturday, 1st inst., a large barn at Napan, owned by Jas. Kipley, was destroyed by fire with nearly all its contents, including twenty-two cattle, loss $1200; no insurance.

The loss was caused by Mr. Kipley's son, seven years old, playing with matches in the barn.

It was reported in Halifax the other day, that the Allan Line of Ocean Steamers had arranged to run to that port. This is perhaps premature, but it is not at all unlikely, for they are the Canada's tenders, and one or the other of them will shortly run steamers both there and to St. John. In the case of the Allen steamers, it is expected that they will be needed to run to Halifax in the summer, but in the winter months and while Portland is used as their winter port, the regular steamers can call at Halifax en route.—Monetary Times.

ANOTHER CONFIRMATION.—The schooner 'Perseverance' owned in Eastport, Maine, but claiming to sail under a British registry, has been condemned in the Vice Admiralty Court at St. John, N. B., for illegal fishing no defence was made by the owners.

FATAL ACCIDENTS IN NEW BRUNSWICK.—On Wednesday fortnight Mr. Hunter Cox, of Kent, while engaged in hauling wood, fell under his sled and was killed. On Monday last two young men, named Horatio and James Pickert, of Kingston, were accidentally drowned in the Kennebec river.

THE VACANT PROFESSORSHIP.—The news says that Mr. W. P. Dole will be a candidate for the Professorship of the University, vacated by the death of Prof. Campbell, and it is expected that Mr. Dole for the position. We certainly think that a graduate of the University itself should be chosen. The Professors at Sackville are all, or nearly all, graduates, and these, knowing thoroughly the wants of the Institution and acquainted with the habits of the youth of the country have been very successful teachers. By all means let us try one of our own young men.—Globe.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS DEMANDED.—The Roman Catholics of this Province have determined to petition the Legislature in regard to the school question, and a paper is now in circulation, and has already been signed by several thousand persons. It is addressed to His Excellency the Governor, to the Legislative Council, and to the House of Assembly. It prays that as a School Bill to be brought before the Legislature, that body will have a clause inserted in it, giving to the Catholic minority of New Brunswick what has been granted to the Protestant minority of Quebec—the establishment of separate schools. It shows, as precedents, the school systems of Great Britain, France, Austria, and other countries. Copies of this petition have been sent to all the parishes in the diocese, and of course are signed by almost every Catholic. It will no doubt be presented to the Legislature by one of the members from St. John.

This is probably the petition to which the Bishop requested the signatures of his congregation in the Cathedral on Sunday last. As public sentiment in New Brunswick is strongly opposed to the establishment of sectarian schools supported by public money, it will not be difficult to secure a protest, in the form of a petition, in opposition to such a scheme. It has already been shown that separate schools were conceded in Quebec because the Common Schools of the Province were themselves denominational. The action of Quebec, therefore, cannot properly be applied to New Brunswick where the schools are now and will continue to be purely non-sectarian.

If the friends of non-sectarian schools in the Legislature require to have their hands strengthened by petitions protesting against sectarian schools, they need only communicate their wishes to the people of the Province, and the result will prove highly satisfactory.—Tele.

THE JOINT HIGH COMMISSION.—New York, April 3.—The Tribune Washington dispatch says:—"It is probable that the work of the Joint High Commission will terminate about the last of the present month, and says that the Commission reports to the contrary, there is a wide spread impression that the Commission is charged with the settlement of the Fishery question, the Alabama claims, and other points of difference between the two Governments, and that the result of the Commission's labors will be a treaty which on the part of England will be operative the day it is signed, as her representatives have already indicated to the United States, and the Senate will have to confirm the treaty. It is thought that the treaty will contain a clause for the appointment of another Joint Commission, to adjudicate the Alabama claims under the conditions to be decided by the present Commission, and that the present body will name persons to have settlement of the cases that remain. The terms of the last named officers will be very long, and it will require years to settle the claims on any basis which can be established. As it is probable that the Senate will adjourn before the last of this month, the President will probably call an extra session, in order to consider the treaty before next December, and to enable a settlement to be begun as soon as possible."

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—The House of Assembly has decided to adopt a system of decimal currency, which will go into operation Feb. 1, 1872.—A second concert given in Charlottetown in aid of the French relief fund, on the 28th inst., was a grand success. The sum of £200. It is said that the Legislature intend to appropriate £300 for this charitable object, making in all a contribution of about £400 currency for Prince Edward Island.—The cost of telegraphing from Charlottetown to Sackville has been reduced from 110 cents a message to 70 cents, at the petition of many of the merchants.—Sir Chas. Fox & Co., of London, have decided to build the Island railroad for £4,500 Island currency per mile.—Chronicle.

NOVA SCOTIA LEGISLATURE.—The Nova Scotia Legislature was prorogued on Tuesday afternoon, the 4th inst., by His Honor the Lieut. Governor Sir Hastings Doyle. The following are the closing paragraphs of His speech on the occasion:—

"That a Joint High Commission has been appointed to deliberate upon the Fisheries and the Alabama Claims, and that, that Commission has entered upon its labors at Washington, and cannot be but matters of deep concern to this Dominion, and especially to the Maritime Provinces. I trust that, in any arrangement, which the Commission may agree, jointly, to recommend to their respective Governments, the peculiar interests of Nova Scotia will not be overlooked."

The measure which you have perfected with a view to improve the Constitution and to give the additional security to the independence of the Legislature, will we may hope, satisfactorily accommodate these objects.

I am glad that in compliance with the recommendation made in my speech at the opening of the Session, you have elaborated and matured a measure which you consider calculated to strengthen the ties of the Government in dealing with the Crown Land question, and to arrest the spirit of the speculation therein, which has lately been the increase.

As the result of your return to your homes, I earnestly impress upon you that your country has claims upon your time and services, as much as upon the attention of the Legislature, and you will take a hearty interest in all that concerns the welfare, moral and material, of Nova Scotia, combining therein a true and loyal regard for the institutions of the Mother Country, to which we all owe so much and an unwavering attachment to the throne of England and to the Sovereign who occupies it.

While the other countries are still suffering from the disastrous effects of the late war, and from the revolutionary spirit which has been awakened by it, we remain in the enjoyment of peace, plenty, and security, for which we have good reasons to be deeply grateful to Him in whose hands are the destinies of all the nations of earth.

THE NEW BRUNSWICK LEGISLATURE.—Was re-opened on the 5th inst. by His Excellency the Governor. The following are the closing and principal paragraphs of Lieutenant Governor Wilnot's speech on the occasion:—

"The Hon. the Chief Justice of the Common Schools will be brought before you, and I feel assured you will give it that consideration which its importance demands."

Other Provinces of the Dominion are far in advance of us as regards this matter, and the time has come when the question of Free Schools must be met and disposed of by the Legislature.

The Dominion Government has been strongly urged during the past year to come to a settlement of the outstanding claims of this Province, but no adjustment has yet been concluded.

An Immigration Convention was held at Ottawa in September last, at which a member of my late Government attended on behalf of this Province.—A Report of the proceedings will be laid before you at an early date.

A measure for regulating the mode of procedure in certain cases of the Supreme Court, together with other grievances affecting the management of Provincial affairs, will be submitted for your consideration.

The Land subsidy, authorized by the Legislature of the Province at the last session, towards the construction of a wharfe and dock at the Riviere du Loup, has been supplemented by the Legislature of Quebec in a like liberal spirit, so that there is a reasonable probability that this highly important commercial line of Railway will soon be in course of construction.

I am satisfied that you will bring to the discharge of your duties an earnest desire for the welfare of the Province, and do most sincerely hope that the results of your deliberations may be found to be promotive of its best interests."

The most important business of the Session will be to dispose of the Government Bill for the establishment of Free Schools. It is said that it is very similar to the one which is now in the hands of the Hon. the Chief Justice, and will become Law, although the Roman Catholics are said to be working up a strong agitation against it.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND LEGISLATURE.—The following resolution in respect to a Railroad was recently passed in the House of Assembly by a vote of 18 to 11:—

"That a bill be introduced authorizing the construction of a Railroad from the Casseque to Georgetown, touching at Summerside and Charlottetown, and also branches to Souris and Tignish, at a cost not to exceed £5,000 currency, and to enable them to construct, including all suitable stations, stations, sidings, turn-tables, rolling stock, and all the necessary appliances for a first class Railroad, and to enable them to acquire suitable wharves at Casseque, Summerside, Charlottetown and Georgetown, provided the contractors for building and furnishing the said Railroad requested the signatures of his congregation of Debonaires of Prince Edward Island, at thirty years at par, without any allowance for discount or otherwise."

TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

LONDON, April 9.—Paris papers say there has been cannonading all day. The Campselysees is completely deserted. The National Guard is in the streets, and is being protected from the shells which fall in every direction, and many close to the American Legation.

The result of the last forty-eight hours cannonade is that the Versailles forts have crossed the Seine and occupy Sabonneville and Longchamps.

The drawbridge and door of Port de Maillet is broken.

The Communists are building additional barricades in quarters threatened by the besiegers.

LONDON, April 10.—To-day is held as Easter holiday in stock exchange and markets generally in London and Liverpool.

The French war continues in Paris. The Cathedral of Notre Dame has been sacked, Robespierre vainly endeavored to save it from pillage. Nearly all valuables were plundered.

The Archbishop of Paris has been transferred from the Convent of the Madeleine to the Convent of Clugny.

Gen. Cluseret has been arrested, charged with misappropriation of public funds.

A Versailles dispatch says the Government has refused to pay for the arms, as yet cost, rather than bombard the city.

Port Valerien fires mainly to clear ramparts and prevent the artillery from being used to repel an attack on the city.

Partial breach has been effected in the fortifications.

FROM OTTAWA.

Ottawa, April 8.—In the House of Commons to-day Carter states it was the desire of the Government to prorogue on Wednesday next.

Ottawa, April 10.—Blaine moved that revisors who prepare the list for the Dominion Government adding names to those disfranchised by local act. Carried after considerable discussion.

Drew moved to make polling places in Ottawa the same as for Local Elections; carried.

The Bill was then reported and read third time and passed.

EDITOR'S NOTE, &c.

After the last week's number of our paper had been made up for the press, we received a letter giving the sad news, of the death of our very excellent and highly esteemed young friend Charles A. Wood, Esq., A. B., of Sackville.

We could then only announce the fact, but we fully intended to attempt to prepare with our own pen some suitable tribute to respect his memory, for this week's Wesleyan; but the great press of original matter for our paper prevented our doing so.

FRIENDSHIP'S TRIBUTE.

Where does one form friendships more pleasant and enduring than at a public school? How many there are through these Provinces who first met at school, and now stand in a land of strangers, and who, in the kind of kindly recognition, a word of pleasant greeting. Never can we forget the impressions produced by the meeting of our old school friends, and how they greet our admiring and reverential gaze. When alone at early morn we walked up and down those grounds devoted to innocent and healthful recreation, and in the midst of contemplation, when a little later we entered the awful presence of the Principal and his assistants,—when after the daily duties were over, in mingling the school boys' juvenile sports. That was in '59. Nearly twelve years have passed since then. How many changes have taken place. Those boys are busy, shifting their abode, and some are no more to be seen. How many of them are now believing pursuing some useful honorable calling. But some have gone. Their earthly career closed. Their sun seemed but to have arisen, when first the darkness of darkness of death. "Broken Columns" we say, but God knows. Often as we have glanced over the annually increasing roll of College Graduates, we have wondered how many of the called from the activities of earth to the world of Eternity. We are permitted to wonder no longer. The last "Wesleyan" tells us who first met at school, and now stand in a "narrow stream." One "when perhaps of all, we knew and loved the best. Charles H. Wood, or Charlie as we were wont to call him. Away from his home, while fleeing our rigorous climate and seeking the benefits of a warmer clime, and terminated his earthly career. He sleeps, but he sleeps in Jesus. He has gone to his rest, that rest that remains for the people of God.

We cannot help associating our departed friend in our thoughts with another also recently departed. In company with the late Miss Allison, Mr. Wood made a continental tour two or three winters ago. Both were, then, as well as at present, devoted to the study of the Bible, and were, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuperate their physical energies amid the balmy breezes of Southern France. Now both have fallen asleep, one amid the embraces of home, the other in the arms of death. Divided in their deaths by a few weeks, both, we doubt not, have met in the heavenly city—the one a teacher, the other a student, both were seeking to recuper