The sago is made from the pitch of a tree trunk. This tree—the sago tree—is a kind of a palm, like the date-tree and the cocoanut tree. It is found in the East Indian Islands, where it gives food to many thousands of people, particularly in the large island of New Guinea, where a great part of the population is almost entirely denedent upon it.

This fact cannot be avoided, and the sentiment in favor of some form of conscription, which will bring the shirkers to time, is rapidly gaining favor among all classes of people.

In the light of these facts, the advisability of enlisting immediately with the 125th Battalion is strikingly lighted with
