

News of the Week THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS, AUTHOR OF "MARGARET GARRETT'S HUSBAND," AND OTHER NOTABLE STORIES.

CHAPTER LXXVI
Although Ruth has guests Brian goes to "School."

But Ruth's gay spirits soon made him forget Mollie and his own passive deception. She told him as much of her business matters as she thought would interest him, then of her trip down on the train, repeating in a manner that the time passed quickly. Passed too without as much as one thought straying Mollieward.

The tension so often present was not felt between them. In fact, it had been a long time since they had passed so pleasant an evening—when alone. Yet unconsciously Brian had seen Mollie and he often had dined with her.

Here were two people in love with each other, but because of the foolish pride of one, they were actually writing apart when the very thing which caused the proud attitude should have brought them together. Ruth cared nothing for money, she merely made her a means to make her and Brian more comfortable, and so happier. She considered his objection to her working foolish, and thought that soon he would look at it from her viewpoint.

The next evening as soon as they finished dinner, Brian put on his hat. In response to Ruth's query as to where he was going, he returned: "Have you forgotten that I take my typewriting lesson to-night?"

"Oh, dear, how stupid of me, I had forgotten and asked Mr. and Mrs. Roberts in to play cards. We'll have to play three handed, that is all," she tried to hide her disappointment. Brian was doing something to increase his efficiency in his office to save money at the same time; she must not discourage him. It wasn't the money he would save that she pealed to her; it was the idea that at last he was bestirring himself. "Never mind, you will be home in time for the rabbit," she added brightly. "I'll not start it until near by eleven," she kissed him good-bye and patted him on the shoulder in a motherly sort of a way. She hated to have him spend his evenings away from her; but she would not say or do a thing to make him feel that she disapproved. Really she didn't; she was proud that he had thought of doing something, anything, no matter what it was.

Brian's optimistic attitude with out the effort required to make it come true, had worried Ruth. He was always "going to get there," but it was "some day," not now.

While they were so comfortable as regarded money (owing to her salary) Ruth cared little for what the financial returns might be for the present. What she wanted longed for was his success—his recognition as a lawyer. In other words she wanted to be proud of him. Often Clara Roberts would tell her of something Kenyon had done which, while it meant very little to her in a monetary way, it meant a great deal in that it influenced faith in him as a rising young lawyer; and one who in time would be recognized as such.

Clara was so proud of Kenyon, she would do so making Ruth feel that she would like to see the same direction.

"Have you forgotten that I take my typewriting lesson to-night?"

"Oh, dear, how stupid of me, I had forgotten and asked Mr. and Mrs. Roberts in to play cards. We'll have to play three handed, that is all," she tried to hide her disappointment. Brian was doing something to increase his efficiency in his office to save money at the same time; she must not discourage him. It wasn't the money he would save that she pealed to her; it was the idea that good looking letters and briefs. It is quite a saving, and unfortunately a young lawyer needs to save, and he is awfully hard to have him go out on his own staff. I regret I did not get a touch system, and think Brian is wise to go "at it systemically." It won't take him long to learn, he is "quick" to grasp anything.

"Indeed he is," Ruth answered proudly as she set up the card table. It awfully hard to have him go out to-night, but I would not let him see that. He is so good about my work, and I have to be away so much."

There was a peculiar look upon Kenyon Roberts' face when Ruth spoke about Brian's goodness when she was obliged to be away, which she fortunately did not notice. He had seen Brian, unobserved by the latter, several times with his arms full of parcels, hurrying in the direction of Washington Square. And Clara had told her that Mollie King, whom Brian used to know, intimately lived down there, he had two and two together and made four, without any trouble. But she had not seen him, and had as yet not mentioned it even to Clara.

"Brian came in about half-past ten," Ruth had just gone into the kitchen to make the rabbit. Clara was sitting at the table, looking at the paper.

"What business school are you attending?" Kenyon Roberts asked.

"Oh, one down in the vicinity of the Capitol," Brian answered, glad that Ruth was not in the room to hear the question.

NORFOLK NEWS

NORFOLK WILL GET LOAN HONOR FLAG

County is Certain to Pass Its Objective for the Victory Loan

NEWS FROM SIMCOE

(From our Own Correspondent) Simcoe, Nov. 14.—Mr. Geo. J. McKie, county organizer for the Victory Loan campaign, when interviewed last night, reported for the day to have expressed confidence regarding the county's prospect of winning the flag.

Port Rowan and Washington were up yesterday for the first time, and the forces there are at another.

Simcoe will receive her flag to-day, and possibly a score on Monday when the totals are summed up. The total for the county last night was $1,278,150, or $72,000 below the original objective.

Clara was sitting at the table, looking at the paper.

"What business school are you attending?" Kenyon Roberts asked.

"Oh, one down in the vicinity of the Capitol," Brian answered, glad that Ruth was not in the room to hear the question.

NOTICE—The party who removed the Armouries on Monday night, a large Union Jack, is requested to return the same at once. It may be left at The Courier Agency.

Young Rogers is again fever. He was up at Grimsby on a horse and buggy theft case and got clear. Niagara Falls was in waiting, but after being transferred to Hamilton to get an acquittal there. Yesterday he put one over, Magistrate Gunton who reluctantly allowed him out on suspended sentence, his parents undertaking to produce him for sentence when required. He has quite a history for a 15 year old, and the general opinion is that he got a poor start.

More than one calling at large after dark have missed the bullet from the policeman's "barber." Some one will have a dead dog after the officer gets a little more practice.

From reports it seems to be evident that the lights in the park were turned off too early this autumn. Of course, November has been unusually mild.

Though the war is over, there is still a bit of "overcast" business going on at the post office, daily. Hundreds in town are anxiously waiting for something more than a trench card from the British mails.

H. M. Ramsey and Chief Canning are both said to be convalescing from influenza.

Won the Flag.

Simcoe won the flag this morning. The county flag will be run up at 9 o'clock, as proposed, and then take place as the outcome is sure by noon.

Getting Back Three Million Dollars

THE PAPER CONTROLLER for Canada a few weeks ago added $12 a ton to the price of news print paper—the kind used in printing the Courier. This addition, following closely upon several previous increases authorized by the Paper Controller, has meant to Canadian newspaper publishers a total increased publishing cost, in the market of paper alone, in the past eighteen months, of three million dollars. This very considerable sum Canadian publishers must recover from their customers, their readers and advertisers.

In connection with the earlier increases the readers of many daily newspapers have been required to pay $1 or more per year for their newspapers, while the subscription price of very many weekly newspapers has been increased from 50 to 100 per cent. In many cases still further increases will be necessary.

But all the three million dollars increase in paper costs cannot be loaded on readers; some of this sum must come from the advertisers—this in the form of increased advertising rates. Advertising rates in Canada are generally speaking, much lower per thousand in circulation than in the United States. Speaking on this point the editor of Marketing, a Canadian advertiser's newspaper published in Toronto, says in his last issue: "In meeting the Canadian publishers' calls for higher rates, advertising buyers should not fail to recognize that for years they have benefited by the publisher's undervaluation of his space, and should be the more willing on that account to recognize the present necessities." To all of which The Courier assents.
