Righted in Time

It was grim enough earnest to Moya. Each time she thought of Guy's deep true words, his sincere, grey-eyed gaze, she felt ashamed. What a silly child she had been! But there was only one thing for it now—to go on groping her way along the labyrinth, whatever way it might lead. There was no turning back now.

"I dare not," she said truly. "Not yet Barry. Not till—till he's gone. Oh, he won't stay long. We're not his kind of people. I realized that. We're little in common with him. He'd think ours an aimless, poor sort of life. He won't stay long. Besides there's the matter. Oh, no, Barry, we must carry it through, now we've begun it."

Barry swung himself down from the breakwater, avoiding an incoming wave with agility. It was not perhaps very cautious of him, but he was feeling rather sore just then. If seeing how inoffensive they were, and very often quite pretty as they shone, wet and glistening like jewels, in the sun.

His own sense of self-esteem was as ruffled as Moya's. If she felt paltry, so did he. He had not considered one bit what that piece of good fun—their mock engagement—would entail. But just as Guy's words had opened Moya's eyes to the sacredness and depth of love, of which they had made such a mockery, so had Barry's mother opened his.

Like most boys, he had a deep love and reverence for his mother unspoken and unconfessed, and her gentle, loving words had made him feel "pretty shabby," as he called it to himself. She had spoken of love, of betrothal and marriage in such a way as he had never thought of before. Far more had she said than he told Moya. She seemed to think it was the most sacred and wonderful thing that could happen in life to him, instead of being a kind of joke, a headless bit of fun, embarked on in a mad moment.

"I feel a low-down bad," muttered Barry to those pebbles viciously kicked from his path. "Why didn't I think of that before, I wonder? Help Moya out of a hole!—it seems as if we're in a precious deep one at this moment. Oh, but why did the mother want to talk to me like that? I just wish she hadn't."

She had talked so simply so tenderly. She had told him of her own youth and its long-ago romance, now buried in his father's grave. He had been startled from his boyish heedlessness into a new considering of life.

He walked far along the sands and then struck inland down the narrow, verdant lanes. And, turning a corner, he met Una Raleigh.

She smiled at him in her wondrously quiet way. "Alone?" she said. "You alone, too? Why everyone seems solitary this morning. Everyone seems on their own. Is there no party, no excursion mooted? Is everyone pining for solitude? But I thought at least you would not be alone. Wherever is Moya?"

"I left her down on the sands," said Barry moodily, an undercurrent of irritability sounding through his voice—a warning note which said: "I have put up with a lot, but patience is near its breaking point." He did not seem to notice this lack of chivalry in the abandonment of his betrothed by the sea waves. But Una looked faintly surprised.

"I haven't congratulated you yet."

Dear Sir—Just a few lines in favor of your Liniment. I would not be without MINARD'S LINIMENT for anything, as it will relieve almost anything. When I go hunting I always take a bottle in my pocket. It is the best for Cuts in the Head, I ever used; and for Cuts in the Chest, and every other part of a person, and for Sore Throat it has no equal. It is also a good liniment for the hair as I always use it. I have also taken blemishes off of horses with MINARD'S LINIMENT and I would use no other for any reason for Man or Beast as I think it is far the best.

I remain, Yours truly,

she said, "Oh, I want to do so. I hope—"

But Barry broke in on her swiftly. "I'm sick to death of congratulations. Fed up with them! For goodness' sake spare me any more!"

Una was silent. He looked at her, then, and laughed awkwardly. "Moya and I are not the romantic kind, you know," he said.

"No," said Una slowly and added: "That was what she said."

"Oh, we don't want people to make a fuss about it," said Barry. "I hate a fuss!"

Una said nothing to that. He had turned round and was walking slowly by her side. And he gave another awkward, uneasy laugh in the silence. "That isn't your idea of things, I know. But then you never do approve of me. You think me an empty-headed sort of chap. I don't come to your standard. I've always known that."

Una turned her clear, steady gaze on him, though her color had mounted a little.

"No," she said, in her gentle way. "I don't think that at all. I simply think you don't do justice to yourself."

Barry tried to laugh again, as if he would have laughed all sentiment away with scorn.

"You don't give yourself a chance," went on Una steadfastly. "You laugh away anything serious—smuggle away any deep feeling as if you were ashamed of it. No, that's what I think, if you really want to know."

He was silent a moment. "Why did you never tell me that before?" he asked then.

"Because you've never spoken in this way to me before, I suppose," answered Una. "And, perhaps, because I'm not in the habit of talking much about what I think to anyone."

She was not. It was more often people confided in her, told her their own thoughts. She was that rarity, a good listener. She had the gift of sympathy, and there was an even more rare peace of soul and spirit about her, so that with her one felt at peace, too, with the world and with oneself.

SUNKEN EYES BRIGHTEN QUICKLY, HEALTH RETURNS

In a Message to Ailing Women Doctor Hamilton Tells How It Is Done

In speaking of the ills from which women suffer, Dr. Hamilton points out that nine out of every ten women are by nature inclined to habitual constipation. Harsh purgatives are resorted to which only intensify the trouble. Although not generally known, it is a constipated condition of the bowels that causes half the sickness and tired weariness with which all womankind is so familiar. It was after long years of study that Dr. Hamilton perfected the pills which have been of such marvellous benefit to women the world over. In his pills of Mandrake and Butterbur every sufferer will find an absolute specific for constipation, sick headache and biliousness. It is safe to say that Dr. Hamilton's Pills bring better health and keep the system in a more vigorous condition than any other medicine ever discovered. At all dealers, in 25c boxes.

way," said Barry point blank. "No, I often think you avoid me. I'm not good enough to waste time on, I suppose."

He spoke moodily again, frowning at the ground. Una stopped and faced him.

"Oh, why do you say that?" she cried distressed. "I don't do anything of the kind. If you must have it—I do keep out of the way. Because—well, I'm not as gay and lively as Moya. I'm much more likely to bore people with my dullness. And, besides—"

She smiled at him, but not very spontaneously.

"Oh, surely you need not be told. That two is company just now, and three is none. You must know that yourself—and would soon grumble if prospective sisters-in-law gave you and Moya their uninteresting society at every turn!"

Barry took a quick step forward as she turned away.

"Look here, Una, I'm going to have none of that nonsense. That's got nothing whatever to do with our engagement. If you're going to absent yourself like this—"

But she was hurrying away. She said over her shoulder: "Can't you allow me to share the fashionable and universal desire for solitude? No, you're not coming with me. I want to be alone."

But Barry, left alone, too, growled something unnamable, but unintelligible beneath his breath. Usually Una was the most sensible and understanding of girls. It was all rubbish if this engagement means an evening and uninterrupted tete-a-tete with Moya, and an end to other intercourses. It was absurd that people should look surprised if she sat on the sands alone and he equally chose to walk in the lanes alone. It was beyond all reason for Una to look as if she blamed him. Absurd. Ridiculous! Well, there were no words for it. Barry left him get on with his engagement, vowed Barry, and he would never be such an ass as to get engaged in reality. Trust him for that!

CHAPTER IV.

"You and Barry haven't quarrelled, have you?" began Una, anxiously. Moya turned round sharply, and her voice was quite as sharp as she answered: "Of course not. Whatever makes you think so?"

Una hesitated. She could not have put her reasons into words. Indefinable they were, but troubling for all that.

"Oh, I don't want to appear interfering," she cried, uncomfortably, and then the anxious words burst from her loving sister's heart. "But you don't seem happy, Moya. And—oh, surely the first few days of an engagement are so precious!"

Precious! Moya could have laughed aloud. Embarrassing, boring, irritating and annoying—she could have found plenty of adjectives for those first few days, but hardly the one which came from Una.

"I'm perfectly happy," she declared, obstinately. "I'm quite—trying to even that I may not come up to your standard of romance. Una. Please don't expect me to do so. And as for Barry, he'd simply hate anything verging on the romantic or sentimental."

Una looked earnestly at her. "Are you sure you understand Barry?" she asked.

"What do you mean?" said Moya to that.

"Oh, Moya, dear, men are not like us. They often hide their deep feelings as if they were something to be ashamed of. But they want those feelings satisfied, all the same."

"And you mean," interrupted Moya, with a certain curiosity in her voice, "that Barry is dissatisfied?"

A shadow of trouble passed over Una's face at those words. Her deep, clear eyes were perplexed and seeking.

Moya laughed lightly—perhaps she had to laugh in lieu of any other emotion. "You seem to know more about him than I do," she said, flippantly. "You just distress yourself about nothing. Because we don't come up to your standard, or fulfil that story-book ideal of yours."

She went out of the cottage singing gaily. Una followed her into the garden, but no further, as Moya went on to the shore. Moya never used to be flippant, thought Una, perplexedly. She used to be gay, the life of the family, but not flippant—unfeeling.

"Oh, I wish things were different," thought Una, anxiously. But in what way she wanted them to be different she did not know. There was a lack somewhere, she only realized that—something lacking in Moya's and Barry's relationship, and something, too, brooding and gathering, like a rising storm in the home atmosphere that so little a time back was bright with the spirit of holiday.

THIS WOMAN'S RECOVERY

Shows Remarkable Curative Power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Chester, Ont.—"Before using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had terrible pains in my sides and was not regular. Finally I got so weak I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest half way up the steps. I tried two doctors but they did me no good. I saw your medicine advertised in the newspapers and thought I would give it a trial. I took four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and was restored to health. I am married, am the mother of two children, and do all my housework, milk eight cows, and do a hired man's work and enjoy the best of health. I also found Vegetable Compound a great help for my weak back before my babies were born. I recommend it to all my friends who are in need of medicine, and you may print this letter if you wish."

Mrs. HENRY JANKE, R. R. No. 4, Chester, Ontario.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who will continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

FRUIT DESSERTS

There are many refreshing fruit desserts to be made from fruits on the market, fresh or dried, that will be a more fitting end to the heavier foods of the nourishing winter meal. For instance, a delicious blanc mange can be made from figs, as follows:

FIG BLANC MANGE.

Use your favorite recipe for blanc mange, using the proportions for a quart of milk. While hot, add a half pound of washed figs cut in small pieces and cooked until tender, with one-fourth cupful of sugar and two tablespoonsful of lemon juice. Turn the whole mixture into molds and serve when chilled with a meringue made from the whites of eggs, a tablespoonful of powdered sugar for each egg and about one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice.

SCALLOPED APPLES.

Butter a deep baking dish or casserole. Starting with the crumbs from a stale loaf of bread and three cupfuls of sliced apples, alternate crumbs and apples in thin layers, pouring over each melted butter and sprinkling with sugar and nutmeg. This will take about two-thirds of a cupful of butter and only one-half cupful of sugar, unless the apples are very sour. Add the juice of half a lemon before you put on the last layer of bread crumbs, which should be on top. Bake until brown and the apples tender.

Best Medicine He Has Ever Taken

FATHER TELLS OF SON'S HELP FROM DODD'S MEDICINES.

He Recommends Everybody Who Has Shaking or Pain in the Heart to Use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets and Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Birmingham, Sask., May 10.—(Special.)—"Dodd's Kidney Pills and Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are the best medicines my son has ever taken."

This is the statement of Mr. Johannes Reinson, a well-known resident here. "When he started to take them," Mr. Reinson continues, "there was not much hope of him. Soon after starting to take the Dodd's Medicines he began to improve in health and now he is well."

He advises everybody who has shaking or pain in the heart to use Dodd's Kidney Pills and Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets.

The Dodd's Medicines act on the two essentials to good health. The Tablets help to digest the food and produce good blood. The Pills act on the kidneys, healing and strengthening them, thus ensuring that the blood is kept free from impurities. For the work of healthy kidneys is to strain all impurities out of the blood.

Ask your neighbors if Dodd's Kidney Pills do not heal and strengthen the kidneys.

Customs of Ancient Inns.

Abroad, where many quaint and curious hotels, taverns and inns of respectable antiquity abound, it is natural to find numerous odd customs. For instance, there is an inn in a town on the Rhine wherein whenever a patron is heard to swear he must place coin equivalent to the bar on the counter.

Until recent years there was a most respectable old inn in Warwickshire, the proprietor of which was accustomed to invite all his patrons to accompany him and his wife on Sunday morning to a church directly opposite the inn. On returning from service each customer was expected to partake of refreshments offered by the hospitable landlord free of charge.

Those who put up at one hotel in Edinburgh obtain, if they are accustomed to the ways of the place, a first-hand knowledge of the Scottish disposition.
