Author Says It Aims at Widening the Scope of Arbitration Se as to Include Questions of National Honor -Baron Constant, Head of French Delegation to Interparliamentary Union, Duscusses the Limitation of Armaments.

London, July 25 .- William Jennings Bryan's proposed rider to the model arbitration treaty was discussed at a session of the international council of the interparliamentary union yesterday morning, and resulted in its being re-morning, and resulted in its being recast as follows:

"If a disagreement should arise, which is not included in those to be submitted to arbitration, the contracting parties shall not resort to any act of hostility before they separately or jointly invite, as the case may necessitate, the formation of an international commission of edquiry or mediation of

By INA WRIGHT HANSON

From the doorway Fitzgerald looked moodily at me from in front of the dresser. I looked moodily at Fitzger-"She refused me," he said.

"I've got to go to Mrs. Whiting's dinner" I answered Fitz nodded and threw himself heavily into a chair.

"I wouldn't go, you know, after Mrs. Whiting's niece refused me, so she had to rustle up you." I glared at him, then jerked open the

"Seems to me, in the interest of humanity, you might have staved off your old proposal till after the dinner. I've got to take Miss Whiting in. What I say to her? I'm no society man."

"You might talk about me. darned strange she refuses me," Fitz responded modestly. "Of course I'm fat, but what of that? Look at my money?" I turned from my hair brushing and regarded Fitz with surprise.

"She's different from other girls," he went on mournfully. "You never know what she is going to do or say next. She said if she ever found the man she wanted to marry and he didn't ask her she would propose to him. You say a word for me, old man, and maybe she will change her mind about it "All right," I said and started for the infernal dinner. If I had been left in peace I could have translated a few more pages of that Latin work I was Why I should have (figuratively of course) fallen on my face and wor-shiped Claudia Whiting the moment I saw her I don't know. That any man could help adoring her after he came to know her is incredible, but I think I began before ever she said a word to me. It couldn't be because her eyes were the bluest I ever saw or her hair crinkled sunshine—I suppose a poet would describe it better-or her lips red as the roses she wore in her belt. One day since that dinner she told me ing about affinities. It may be that mysterious word holds the reason. What we talked of is vaguely remembered. I know that I walked home-ward carrying with me a vision of sweetest seriousness, for that describes Claudia as she appeared that day. When I turned the corner, beyond which were my lodgings, I saw Fitz-gerald at my gate, his broad back toward me. I remembered my forgotten promise and fled incontinently. I couldn't face him. Later I stole into my room like a thief in the night. Next day I went to call on her and to make my peace with Fitz, who had in-terviewed me that morning. She was in the garden, and I stated the object of my call at once.

"If you knew him better you would appreciate him more," I said and launched forth at some length into his peculiar graces and virtues. Claudia listened, and when I had finished she leaned toward me, smiling roguishly.

"And didn't you care...about coming to see me? If it had not been for Mr. Fitzgerald you would have come anyway, wouldn't you?"

To think that she should have looked straight into my heart and discovered my perfidy! I almost let go of my secret. I almost answered, "I came because I love you." And this on the cities of the lowlands. Up there in the mountains are ferny nooks and man-sanita; there is water cress which makes me hungry this minute. Oh, I know about the woods!" Her blue eyes were shining like the stars of which

and I told her of my published ones and those in contemplation-dry old es-why should I have suppothat they would interest a young creature like her?

But I rambled on, lost in her sweet companionship, till the sun suddenly dropped out of sight, and I saw her shiver in the breeze that stirred the porlars. Then I remembered Fitz.

"Do give him another chance," I said perfunctorily as I rose to go. She lookswer.

For the greater part of a month Fitz was away from town, and I saw Claudia nearly every day. Before going he asked my promise to say a w favor every time I saw hes. There are limits to the duties of friendship, but I promised because I felt that he would make her a good husband. He was an honorable man and had more money than he knew what to do with.

She was such a bewildering little creature, was Claudia. At the first meeting she was so sweetly serious She had told me since that she was frightened to death of me because I knew so much. Fancy it! The day she told me, though, she was bubbling over with laughter, and I suspect she was poking fun at me in her irrepressible Then there was the morning when we walked together to church and she talked so quietly of holy things, and there was that last afternoon in the garden before Fitz came

That day it was the hardest of all to forget myself and remember Sometimes when the tenderness of my heart would creep into my words little spots of color would come and go in her girlish face. I scarcely saw her eyes that day, the white lids drooped so insistently over their blue beauty. At last I pulled myself together with the thought that he could do so much more for her than I, even if she could bring herself to think of me at all, and made my last earnest speech for him. She frowned a little, then she smiled and looked thoughtful.

"I think I shall have to teach you to read poetry," she said.

"Will you?" I asked eagerly. "Begin on 'The Courtship of Miles Standish,' then," she answered and ran, laughing, up the walk,

"I did the best I could for you, Fitz,"
I told him when he returned that even. ing. And I rehearsed the last speech "What did she say?" he demanded.

"Why-she didn't say anything to that. She told me-or hinted-that my education was deficient because I had little knowledge of poetry, and she told me to begin on "The Courtship of Miles Fitz looked at me mournfully. "That's my finish then. Have you read it?" "I was just beginning."

Fitz walked heavily from the room, and I took up my new Longfellow. Short of stature he was, but strongly built and athletic; thought. Not exactly patches, but there were certainly threads of gray. I read on till the speech was finished, the egotistical words of Miles Standish; then I bowed my head in shame and anger. I had talked steadily of myself and my work, but she had led me on. She had no right to call me down so. Tomorrow I would go back to my cabin and forget, but yet I knew I should always remember. I was still brooding when Fitz came back.

"I don't blame you, old man," he began. "Probably you'll make her hap-pier; but, Lord, look at my money!" I blinked at him as he settled down.

"Neat way she had of bringing mat-ters to a focus," he went on, picking up my book which lay face downward on the table. "Why, darned if I be-lieve you've read it all!" "I've read enough," I said resentful-y. "I read what she thinks of me." One moment that blessed Fitz gazed ly. at me, then in words of one syllable he gave me the gist of that poem—made me to understand that my Claudia was impersonating the Puritan maiden in her immortal speech, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"

And to think I ever had deemed Fitzgerald stupid! I found my blessed girl in the gar-den, but she did not hear my approach. She was on tiptoe, trying to reach a rose which swung above her head.

"I have come to speak for myself, Claudia," I said. The dear hands ceased from their quest to hide the blushes of her sweet face. Her girlish form trembled. "You think me bold!" she cried apprehensively.
