love. Some girls have lips that seem made for kisses.

"A man had given all other bliss
And all his worldly worth for this.
To waste his whole heart in one kiss
Upon perfect lips."

wrote Tennyson. There are women like that. It is not a poet's dream, this, of women who madden and set men aflame, and for whose kiss they will risk everything.

Once I took the trouble to count the number of kisses described in a novel by a popular woman novelist. There were seventy in a book of 320 pages, and she did not repeat herself. Each kiss had a different luscious adjective.

Was it in the secret of her popularity? I suspect that many other people derive vicarious satisfaction from reading about kisses, which they are never likely to obtain. So many lovers are laggards in this respect, and few come up to the standard of the fiction writers' lurid imagination. Of all novelists' kisses, I like best this tender-strained description:

"The next thing that spoke to him was the touch of her lips upon his. The touch was as gentle as that of a leaf swayed by a light wind."

"And when at last he felt the pressure of her fan relax, and the challenge of her lips offered itself to him undented, he felt that he had kissed some dream, or some verse of Shelley's."

Just Folks.

THE SCOUTMASTER.
There isn't any pay for you, you serve without reward.
The boys who tramp the fields with you but little could afford.
And yet your pay is richer far than men who toil for gold.

For in a dozen different ways your service shall be told.
You'll read it in the faces of a troop of growing boys.
You'll read it in the pleasures of a dozen many joys.
And down the distant future—you will surely read it then.
Emblazoned through the service of a band of loyal men.
Five years of willing labor and of brothering a troop.
Five years of trudging highways, with the Indian cry and whoop.
Five years of camp fires burning, not alone for pleasure's sake,
But the future generation which these boys are soon to make.

They have no gold to give you, but when you see them on to you they'll give you back the splendid things you taught them how to do.
They'll give you rich contentment and a thrill of honest pride.
And you'll see your nation prosper, and you'll all be satisfied.

Kisses . . . "Upon Perfect Lips."

"He kisses divinely," said one girl to another. The maid may be pardoned for a little picturesque exaggeration in describing her lover's prowess. And, after all, the old pagan gods were adepts at kissing. Perchance he kissed as Cupid kissed Psyche.

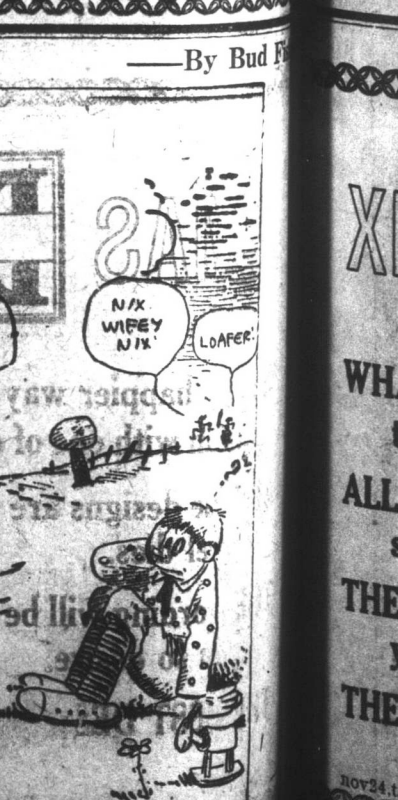

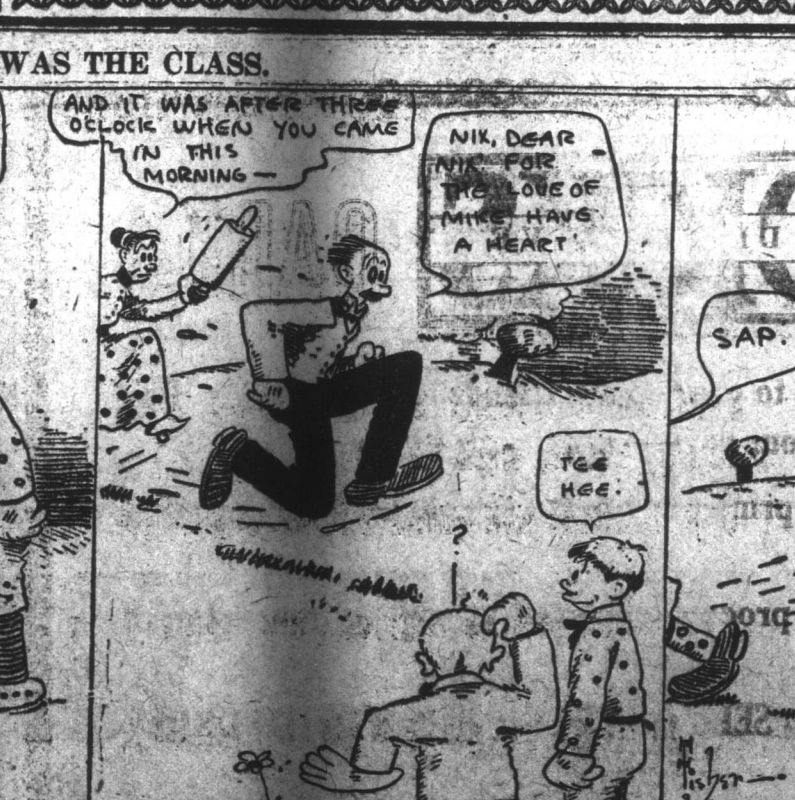

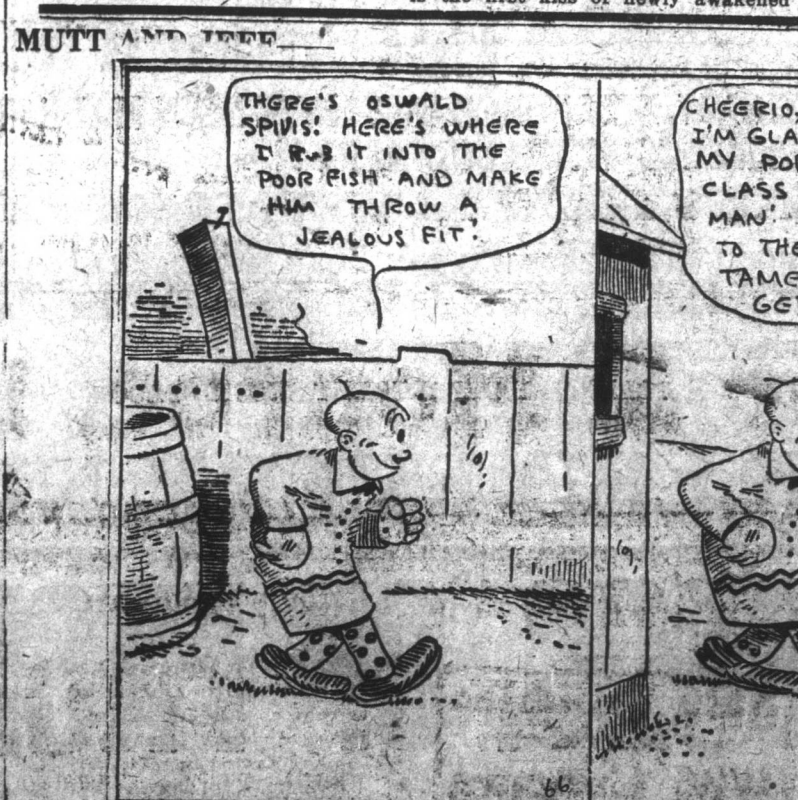

For there are kisses and kisses. There are a hundred or more different varieties. Everybody is not an expert, and some people take a lot of teaching before they learn the rudiments of the art.

There is the family kiss, generally a saccharine, innocuous thing, bestowed as a duty upon parents by their children and by brothers and sisters. It is quite different from the maternal kiss of the young mother on her first-born baby, a beautiful thing to behold in its rapturous tenderness.

Then there is the social peck on the cheek of the two "dear" women friends, who, secretly hate each other, and who would really like to bite. There is the kiss ceremonious bestowed on the Sovereign, and the kiss polite which we offer to some disagreeable relative whom we wish to propitiate and from whom we have expectations. There are also the religious kiss; the kiss of peace bestowed by the celebrant at Mass, the kiss platonic, the spontaneous kiss, and many more—kisses on cheek, on brow, on ear, on hand.
