Harbor Grace Notes.

The second tournament between teams from Bay Roberts and the Aero Tennis Club was played on Thursday last at Bay Roberts, the result being a win for Bay Roberts, three events out of five. Quite a number of visitors were present, but the day did not prove very favourable for tennis. After the tournament, teas were served at the Staff House by the ladies of the Bay Roberts Club, and dancing was indulged in. The party returned back to town in the early hours of the morning having spent a very enjoyable time.

The Danish schooner "Meta," Capt. Anderson, sailed from here on Tuesday last for Glasgow, with a load of seal oil to Messrs. Murray & Crawford from the firm here.

The many friends here of Miss Carrie McKay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. McKay, formerly of the town, but now of St. John's, extend hearty felicitations on the occasion of her marriage to Mr. Austin W. Carter which was solemnized in the city on the 27th ult.

Miss Estelle Dwyer, arrived from St. John's last week and is spending her two week's vacation at her home here.

Mr. T. Connors, Trackmaster with the Nfld. Government Railway was in town during last week.

Miss Midge Oke left on Friday for Petty Harbor, where she will resume her work as teacher.

Comd. Graham Trickett, who is stationed at Belleoram, was in town for a short stay during last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Goodland, and family, who had been visiting relatives at Fogo during the summer, returned home on Thursday.

Miss Rita Parsons, left by Monday afternoon's train for Bay Roberts to take up work, as teacher of the Methodist School there.

Rev. Dr. Darby, of St. John's, who has been visiting town, occupied the pulpit of the Methodist Church, at the Service on Sunday evening, and delivered a fine sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Goodland, and family, who had been visiting relatives at Fogo during the summer, returned home on Thursday.

Boy Requests Sentence to Get Musical Training

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 16.—His ambition to learn to be a musician is greater than his love of freedom, according to Jackson Oglesby, 15.

Jackson asked Judge L. R. Day when arraigned in juvenile court to sentence him to the Kearny Industrial School so he could learn to play a clarinet and join a band. Jackson's brother is a "graduate" of the school and a musician.

Fortunes in Flowers

UNUSUAL BLOOMS, FOUND BY CHANCE IN GARDENS, HAVE BROUGHT WEALTH TO THEIR LUCKY DISCOVERERS.

A story is going the rounds that a man has discovered in his garden a new variety of white narcissus which blooms a month earlier than any other of its colour, and that he is asking a thousand pounds for his find.

Now, as a rule, new varieties of flowers or plants are arrived at only by a long and patient process of cross fertilization, and only one in a thousand of new varieties so obtained proves to be of any value from a commercial point of view.

Yet Nature at times produces "sports" quite on her own account, and the person whose eye is quick enough and whose knowledge is sufficient to spot such a "sport" may at times find something in his garden or on his farm which is worth a small fortune.

For instance, one particularly exquisite white daffodil was so discovered in an old Wexford garden. The owner had no idea of its value until a keen-eyed visitor picked out the rarity.

A Wheat Wonder.

In the summer of 1910 a postman walking through a wheat field at Graveley noticed one ear larger than the rest, thick towards the top, and holding a very large number of grains. He plucked it, took it home, sowed the seeds in his garden, and had a wonderful crop, which, in the following season, was sown on his allotment. In the third year he had enough to sow three acres, each head bearing seventy to eighty grains instead of the usual fifty. The quality was excellent, and the wheat so strong that in sowing three pecks when as far as two bushels. The new find made a very nice sum of money for its sharp-eyed discoverer.

The dumb-bell fruit, which has a flavour between that of the peach and the pineapple, was the chance discovery of a young Britisher named Jeffreys. He was forced to break off his engagement and leave Britain, being stricken with that dread disease consumption. He settled in Ceylon and grew fruit.

The dumb-bell fruit resulted from a chance seedling. Jeffreys was quick to perceive its value, and it has since been extensively cultivated.

Even wild flowers "sport" and offer wonderful chances to the discoverers of the variations. The now popular Barberton daisy came from the Transval some thirty years ago, and was grown in France as a market flower. Yesterday—in 1907—an Englishman found upon the wild a "sport" with vermilion-coloured double flowers. He propagated this, and eventually sold the stock for several hundred pounds.

In spite of rumors of its waning popularity, beige plays an important role for fall.

A very smart tunic of circular cut continues up the front of a far-trimmed coat.

Silks with a shiny and dark surface will be very popular for fall.

Carthage in England

The ruined temple at Virginia Water, Surrey, is always something of a mystery to visitors to that beauty spot, which was at one time a dreary swamp. Standing in a romantic glen, its columns look as though they had been undisturbed for two thousand years. The fact is that the temple has been in its present position about a century. Its original site was ancient Carthage.

On several of the stones are inscriptions. One, in Greek, on an altar stone, tells how Publius Aurlorius dedicated it to Jupiter and to the other gods worshipped in the temple. Others were written in Latin. One of these reads: "Marcus Julius erected this to his most beloved wife Domitia Rogati, who lived twenty-three years."

At one time a fine group of Ancient Greek statues stood near these columns from Carthage. When William IV. opened these lovely grounds to the public, however, these statues were so shamefully mutilated by vandals, that they were completely ruined, and the public were again excluded until the reign of Queen Victoria.

A Captured Crown

The crown of the Emperor Theodore of Abyssinia, which, after being kept in a glass case at the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, since 1869, is now to be returned to its former home in Africa, has had a very eventful history.

This crown was brought to Britain by Sir Robert, afterwards Lord Napier of Magdala, after the capture of Magdala and the death of Theodore in the Abyssinian War of 1869.

It is a ponderous piece of silver-gilt filigree work, many sizes too large for any ordinary head. It is lavishly decorated with little squares and diamonds of red and blue glass, varied with diminutive paintings. A feature is the strange looking pipe which projects several inches through the centre of the dome, apparently for ventilation.

The King's intention to present this crown to the Empress Judith was announced when he granted a farewell audience to Prince Tafari, the heir-apparent and Regent of Abyssinia, whose recent visit to Britain created much interest.

It is interesting to note that the only son of the Emperor Theodore was educated at Rugby. He died in 1879, at the age of 19, and was buried in St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Youngest Soldier in World War is Dead

MUNICH, Aug. 16.—The youngest soldier of the world war, Otto Gyffka, died at Rosenheim, near Munich, a few days after his twenty-fourth birthday.

As a youth of fourteen and a half years, Gyffka volunteered in the German army in August, 1914, saw the heaviest fighting on practically all German fronts and returned to Germany in November, 1918, un wounded but with his nerves badly shaken.

He was a new member of the harbour board in a northern seaside town and was attending his first meeting. The board was discussing a proposal to place two buoys at the entrance to the harbour for the guidance of mariners.

"I beg to propose as an amendment," said the new member, "that one man should be placed there instead of two boys, as the latter are too young for such a responsible position."

A schoolmaster picked up a penny in the playground. Later, when all the children had assembled, he asked, "Has any boy lost a penny?" After a short pause a small boy held up his hand.

"Please, sir, I did."

"Ah, Tom Jones, and where did you lose it?"

"Please, sir, where you found it!"
