STEWART

Lost one, now the wild rain falleth,
On thy cold and narrow bed,
And the wind of autumn calleth,
In sad well-unit calleth,
Broken hearted and oppressed,
Worn and weary,
Sleep on now and take thy rest.

Voices cold may tell thy sorrow,
Strangers lightly speak thy name,
But it matters not, the morrow
Never mors will bring thee shame.
Scomed and slighted,
Broken hearted and oppressed,
Doomed and blighted,
Sleep on nowand take thyrest.

Now the rain more wildly falleth,
From all sorrow thou art free,
And the wind more loudly calleth,
Praise and blame are one to thee.
Loved and hated,
Broken hearted and oppressed,
Famed and fated,
Sleep on now and take thy rest.

Oh! heart with wild angulah riven,
Oh! bright dream so rudely broken,
Young life on the headlands driven,
Of despair and grief unspoken.
Proud, disdainful,
Broken hearted and oppressed,
Weak and siral,
Sleep on now and take thy rest.

The Braes of Yarrow STEWART

Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

Daily Receiving,

They were not pursued far, and when the gentlemen comprising the rescue had gathered again on the bridle path, Gilbert recognized Captain Lindsay himself and halfadozen gentleman of the Queen's Guard, who seemed to regard the whole affair as an excellent hit of sport.

'Silence, gentlemen, silence, 'said the Captain, with his usual stern regard for discipline; 'Let us understand this matter.—Whose men are those, Master Elliot, who attacked you?

'Scott of Tushielaw's,' and Gilbert recounted briefly what had occurred, and in concluding said—' and now, Captain, may I sak by what miracle you and these good gentlemen arrived so timely to my rescue?'

'By no miracle at all, but simply by learning that you were in danger; and obtaining one day's release from duly for myself and your friends here who volunteered to share the journey and the sport with me, we started at our best speed. On the way we found that good woman—why, where in the name of the saints has she gone to?

'She went up to the clouds on a broomstick, 'exclaimed one gallant, laughing.

'Wrong,' said another, 'she disappeared into the earth in a blaze of brimstone'

'Irreverend boys,' cried a third, who affected to be more serious than the rest, and was, in fact, the wildest of the party, 'the old woman has transformed herself into a flea' has got upon, 'Qrilvie's back, and means to ride him to the devil.

'It is singular that she should have run away without the smallest acknowledgment of her services,' said the suptain, pretending not to observe the licence of his little troop; 'I presume whilst we were talking she slipped into the wood, and so got away unobserved. It is singular. However, you can borrow one of the horses of your enemy, and as we ride along I will explain.'

Gilbert, sorry that Kirsty had so abruptly departed the mement she had seen him in safety, determined to seek her at Merlin's Cairn and reward her in whatever fashion the strange woman would permit. He easily procured the horse of one of the dead mosstroopers, which was quietly gr wately the explanations he desired, whilst his comrades followed, jesting and laughing gaily.

Just after you quitted the Castle, the servant of Lady Spens obtained admission. He acquainted me that he had been told by a friend that Spens had been taken away by Scott of Tushielaw, and that he was to be slain. He said also that your journey unsupported by men at your back would end in your death, although you had the King's pardon in your pouch. He wanted to see Lady Mary Dowglas and ask her help.'

'Why should he have sought her help?' said Gilbert innocently.

'Humph, you should know best. At any rate, next, morning her ladyship appealed to the Queen-Regent for assistance and was refused. Then she came to me. I obtained leave, as I have told you already, and for her sake came to your rescue.

'Thanks to her good ladyship and you.'

'They are all due to her.'

'I wish I had something worther to offer her.'

'Humph, if I were a young man—but

"I wish I had something worthier to offer her."

"Humph, if I were a young man—but pshaw, what am I saying. Do not look too often in that quarter, Master Elliot, if you value your own peace."

I have looked too often already, thought Gilbert, but he kept the thought to himself.

"Well, on our way, as I was saying, we met this queer womn of Merlin's Cairn.—She seems to have special information of all that transpires in Tushielaw Tower. She conducted us to its precincts, but we missed you. The woman obtained intelligence of the direction you had taken, and that you were pursued, from a dwarfed creature whom she met at Crosslee.

"How were you so long behind her, in reaching me?" 'How were you so long behind her in reaching me?'
'She took the wood with a torch to show whereabouts she was, whilst we kept the PRIZE-FIGURING.—Bell's Life' laments the fall of prize-fighting in Eugland, on the ground that it tended to keep alive the art of self-defence, protecting the weaker against mere brute force, and being the most certain antidote against the kuife. So, then, brutality is the best preventive of brutality.
