

Jeannie Sinclair,
OR THE LILY OF THE STRATH.

In this ignorance of the true state of matters, and cherishing the expectation we have named, he came trudging across the Moor at his usual swinging pace, his huge cudgel being sometimes lifted to smite off the tops of thistles, and cause their downy seeds to float away on the faint autumn breeze.

On the former occasion Ned was before us only in the darkness, consequently we could give but an imperfect description; but inasmuch as that appearance was remarkable, we shall now take advantage of the circumstance to describe him more graphically.

As the slanting sunlight plays upon his hair, and the glowing western light reveals his towering form in all its aspects, we see what a noble manly-looking fellow he is. His dress is somewhat nondescript to be sure, but it shows nothing repulsive nor even positively ungraceful. A more than usual surface of skin shows itself, but that is only on the throat, breast, and legs, all of which are bare. What a magnificent chest Ned displays—broad and muscular, brown and freckled. A striped shirt of home woven stuff here peeps out, but unbuttoned and thrown back to let the full force of the moorland breeze blow upon it. In summer and in winter, in storm and sun, Ned walks thus with neck and bosom uncovered, to the manifest increase of strength in that vital region. The midnight blast has beat upon it, and they, as well as the more genial atmospheric influences, have united to give it that brassy robustness which in every corded muscle and intersecting vein tells of health and enormous development. Ned evidently rejoices in the possession of the fullest healthy physical life, for all his limbs are of similar gigantic proportions. His whole form is noticeable, but most noticeable his head, with its rough streaming beard and masses of sandy hair, scattered in all directions without the slightest attempt at training or orderly arrangement. You can see that it is combed regularly, for it is not in the least dirty or matted, but when combed you can also see that his fingers are then tossed through it to cast it back from his brow, and send it hither and thither in wild confusion, thus giving it a fierce, lion-like aspect. A face to match this, one would think would be savage and ferocious, but Ned's face is precisely the opposite of this. It is gentle, frank, open, honest, and lovable. The clear blue eye looks straight at its mark with a mild but fearless glance. The lips are neither parted nor compressed, but lying easily together in perfect good nature. The nose is aquiline, and not very large, and the other features are regular. The expression of the face is singularly noteworthy in a man of Ned's habits of life. There is nothing of the mendicant in it, and still less of the rogue. There is no skulking, hanging look about his countenance, either as an apology for his poverty, or as the conscious outcome of a course of lawless conduct. There is not the faintest token that Ned feels anything to be ashamed of, or to show that he considers himself peculiar and different from other people. He has clearly nothing to hide, no discovery to fear, no remorseful memory to prey upon him. His face is open as the day, and kindness and contentment are plainly impressed upon it.

Such was Ned as on this occasion he swung along the moorland path at an easy pace. The knoll where the gipsies' tent had stood for nearly a fortnight was deserted now. Mark Gideon and his little encampment had left the Moor to its accustomed solitude. Ned noted this with a careless eye, for he remembered seeing the light from it streaming across the darkness on the memorable night when last he had been there.

He met no one so long as he was on the Moor, though he looked in all directions in the hope of spying an acquaintance at whom he could learn the news of the Strath. When he came to the fir plantation he struck across it, and emerging on the opposite side, stood in view of the keeper's house. It was closed and had the desolated look of deserted habitation. Slowly and silently Ned walked forward to the door and found it fastened. He put his hand into the hole of the thatch, and found the key there.

"She's no here at any rate," he murmured. "They'll have taken her east tae the toon tae be better attended tae."

He turned, and striking into the path which led by the end of the wood, regained the road, and came with a sudden abruptness on an old man who was wending his way to the hamlet from his daily toil. The old man hearing nothing for Ned's footfall was always noiseless—and never dreaming that any one was at hand, gave a startled roar when the Wanderer's huge form appeared by his side.

"Guid guide us, Ned, man, hoo ye fricht a body," he exclaimed, when he had time to recognise the object which had so startled him. "Ye start up at folk's elbows as if ye was auld Clootie himsel'!"

The sacred concert in Jesu Church on Tuesday night, in defence of the Holy See, was the greatest musical affair ever given in Montreal. Over three hundred vocal and instrumental performers took part.

PERUVIAN SYRUP.

A protected solution of the Protoxide of iron supplies the blood with its Life Element, Iron, giving strength, vigor and new life to the whole system.

If the thousands who are suffering from DYSPEPSIA, FERTILITY, FEMALE WEAKNESSES, &c.
would but test the virtues of the Peruvian Syrup the effect would not only astonish themselves, but would please all their friends, for instead of being cross, "all gone" and miserable, they would be cheerful, vigorous and active.

A distinguished Jurist writes to a friend as follows:
"I have tried the Peruvian Syrup, and the result fully sustains your prediction. It has made a New Man of me, infused into my system new vigor and energy; I am no longer treacherous and debilitated, as when you last saw me, but stronger, heartier, and with larger capacity for labor, mental and physical, than at any time during the last 5 years."
Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

The genuine has "Peruvian Syrup" blowing the glass. A 32 page pamphlet will be sent free.
