London, July 29.-Lord Aberdeen does not look like the father of a marriageable daughter. He is one of the most vivacious, mercurial, black-haired, and popular of peers, says the London Chronicle. On board an ocean steamer he is the life and soul of everything calculated to make time pass pleasantly, and promote good fellowship among all classes of passengers. After the fall of Mr. Gladstone's first home rule government, in which he held office a Irish viceroy, he voyaged to Australia and had a splendid reception from the and other cities.
