

Miscellaneous.

Personal Appearance of Christ.

The following description was sent to the Roman Senate, by Publius Lentulus, proconsul of Judaea, before Herod, Lentulus had seen the Saviour and had made him sit, as it were, that he might give a written description of his features and physiognomy. His portrait, approved though it be, is at least one of the first upon record; it dates from the earliest period of the Church, and has been mentioned by the most ancient fathers. Lentulus writes to the Senate as follows:—"At this time appeared a man who is still living, and endowed with mighty power. His disciples called him the Son of God; others regarded him as powerful prophet. He raises the dead to life, and heals the sick of every description of infirmity and disease. This man is of lofty stature, and well proportioned, his countenance serene and virtuous, so that he inspires feelings both of fear and love. The hair of his head is of the color of wine, and from the top of his head to the ears, straight and without radiance, but it conceals the ears from the shoulders in shining curls. From the shoulders the hair flows down the back, divided into two portions, after the manner of the Nazarenes; his forehead is clear and without wrinkles, his face free from blemish, and slightly tinged with red, his physiognomy noble and gracious. The nose and mouth faultless. His beard is abundant, of the same colour as the hair, and forked. His eyes blue and very brilliant. In reproving or censuring he is awe-inspiring, in exhorting and teaching his speech is gentle and convincing. His countenance is marvellous in seriousness and grace. He has never once been seen to laugh, but many have seen him weep. He is slender in person, his hands are straight and long, his feet beautiful. Grace and solemn in his discourse, his language is simple and quiet. He is in appearance the most beautiful of the children of men. The Emperor Constantine caused pictures of the Son of God to be painted from the ancient description. In the eighth century, at the period in which St. John of Damascus wrote, the lineaments of this remarkable figure were said to be the same as they are to this day.

The Fall of the Leaf.

For the three months now drawing to a close, our name of Fall is much more poetical than the English autumn. It is a season that impresses the dulciest organization. "Falling, falling,"—such is the refrain alike of the whispering breeze that sighs through the grove, and the rust storm that sweeps from a waving branch of the old oak wood. "Falling—falling," murmurs the rivulet, as the crisp leaves drop upon its surface and are whirled away to the distant river, to be lost in its depths ere they reach the tumultuous ocean. "Falling—falling," sound the syllables as our feet steps in the forest rustles the dry leafage that strewn the path. Lo! from the slender and quivering branches of the birch-tree, the yellow shower descends like the golden rain that filled the lap of Danae. The red flakes descend from the huge oak like red drops of blood from a warbling gleam. The red banner of the maples is bent to rags and scattered to the breeze—the emerald verdure of the meadow gives place to a serene brown, as the mirror of the desert yields to the barren sand of the Sahara. The glories of October but herald this fatal fall.

Thus transitory are the pageants, the garlands and glories of this earth. As the monarch of the forest, lately robed in purple and gold, now stands a naked skeleton, so must the magnates of the earth, clothed in "purple and fine linen," be stripped, one by one, of their imperial vestments, and be finally laid in the narrow sepulchre, as gaunt, as lifeless, as unadorned as these lone tree-trunks on the hillside. If we pursue the parallel no further—and look only to the present, gloomy onset of the would be this darkling period of the fall. But we know that summer will once more renew the glorious garniture of the grand old forest, and we know that the lost of earth will again be clothed with a brighter raiment in the realms of immortality. So with not too mournful eyes let us contemplate the funeral pageant of the fall of the leaf.

THE SOLDIER'S GRATITUDE.—A little episode of Florence Nightingale's career in the Crimea is quite too touching to be passed by unnoticed. It is a story that in one of the battles of the campaign, a Highland soldier had his right arm so severely wounded that, when taken to the hospital, the surgeons at once declared that it was impossible to save the limb, and that amputation must be immediately performed. Miss Nightingale thought otherwise, however, and caused the operation to be delayed. In a few days, by careful nursing, she cured the wound and saved the arm. The poor sufferer's heart overflowed with gratitude to his benefactress, which he eloquently worked out in a letter, but his silent gratitude was more eloquent. He told a comrade, that when Miss Nightingale passed him, he kissed her shadow on the pillow. This soldier had as true a heart as ever beat beneath the stars and orders of a field marshal.

When we come to think of it, there is a great deal that is wonderful in the future. A few days ago the cornerstone of an academy was laid in a Massachusetts town, and among other things (if it can be called) deposited within the corner stone was a man's voice. This was done with a sheet of tin-foil, on which the voice is phonographically preserved. Three hundred years hence perhaps sooner, may be later—when this corner stone shall be opened and the voice taken out, people then living will be able to hear the words of one long dead. This suggests so many great possibilities that it is hard to conceive what is beyond the control of man.

FAILURE OF POTATO CROP.—A correspondent of the London Times estimates the loss to the country this season by the potato disease, at £15,000,000, and the potato growers throughout the country are now persevering. The failure of the potato crop this year in England is attributed to the wet season. The facts above mentioned show the reason for the shipment of potatoes from this country to England.

PLANETS IN OCTOBER.—Mercury will continue invisible, being very near the sun both at rising and setting. Venus can be seen in all its splendour as a morning star, rising at the beginning of the month at 5 o'clock and gradually earlier till on the 31st it rises at a quarter past 3. Mars, a beautiful, ruddy, evening star rises at 8 o'clock, and at present the most splendid of the stars. The setting sun leaves it high in the eastern sky. An ordinary ship's glass, or a good opera glass, will show the varied positions of Jupiter and his four moons at the time the hours between 8 and 10 in the evening for our observations we shall see Jupiter rise, unaccompanied by its first satellite, on the 5th, in consequence of the satellite coming in front of the planet and passing across the disk. The same will occur on the 21st and 26th. The first satellite will be invisible at some time during these hours on the 6th and 29th, because it is in the shadow of the planet. The smallest satellite of Jupiter, the second in order of distance from the planet, will not be seen until 10 P.M. on the 7th, when it passes from the face of the planet. It will disappear about 9 P.M. on the 14th, because it passes between the planet and the earth and is thus projected upon the face of Jupiter.

PRECIOUS STONES IN CANADA.—A Montreal lapidary, who has been interviewed by a reporter of the Witness, gives a partial list of Canadian jewels. Precious stones; here are some of them:—First, Quebec diamonds, which, he says, are really rock crystals, very clear and brilliant, these, we believe, are found about Lake Superior. Second, are found about the Bas des Chaleurs New Brunswick, large in size and good in quality, many of them on the Messingouche River. There are also in Canada, too, mostly about Lake Superior, these consist of two kinds—grey and red; each is similar in its character to the onyx. A bracelet of Canadian agates, set in gold, is described as being in appearance and polish to any stone used for the same purpose. We have also the chalcodony, or red corallian. Some of the most delicate shades of color are contained in them. The chlorastrolite (from chlor green and astro the heaven) very much resembles the malachite, are also found in Lake Superior.

—The largest bridge in Europe will be completed next year. It will cross the Volga in the Government of Samara, Russia, on the Siberian Railroad line. The Volga, at the point of the bridge, is about four miles wide in the spring season, and in the autumn is 732 feet. The bridge will be supported by twelve piers, 85 feet high, with ice cutters 35 feet high, at a distance of every 354 feet. A temporary colony is established for workmen employed on the bridge; it occupies about 55 acres, and has 60 different buildings, insured for $75,000. Two thousand men are employed, and among them are one hundred Italian masons. Three steamers and seventy barges are used constantly for forwarding wood, stone, iron and other materials. The bridge will cost about $3,500,000.

—When a finger pricks as though there was a thorn in it, and throbs intolerably when held downward, and yet there is no external sign of mischief, the probabilities are that a felon is in prospect. Go at once to the "butcher" and procure some of the spinal marrow of a beef creature. Take a piece, say about two inches in length, and, having cut it open lengthwise, wrap it around the affected finger, covering, of course, with cloth. In a few hours change the piece of marrow for a fresh one, and continue to keep the finger so encased until all pain has ceased and there is no discomfort when the marrow is removed. The finger will look strangely white and porous, but the cure is complete. This remedy ought to be procured professional. It is really better than the surgeon's knife, and more effectual.

SHIPPING POTATOES TO ENGLAND.—Messrs. J. & W. F. Harrison are to be the pioneers in a new trade which it is to be hoped will be successful. They have chartered the brig "The B. B.," to take a cargo of potatoes from this port to Liverpool, and should the venture be successful it is expected considerable business will be done this year. The crop of potatoes this year is very large, and prices are low. In fact, prices are so low that many farmers will not send their produce to market. Messrs. Harrison sent a small lot of potatoes (about 40 tons) of "Hoopland" last week by the ship "Laura B.," will fairly test the English market. Late mail advices report the potato crop in the old country to be a failure. —St. John Globe.

CONTRADICTION.—We find the following from Rev. J. E. Hopper, Editor of the Christian Visitor, St. John, N. B., in the St. John Globe of Monday:—"Sir,—I have noticed a paragraph in your paper taken from the Truth Standard, stating that the editor of the Christian Visitor has been used by Rev. George Armstrong for accusing him in the Visitor of August 13th of dishonesty, fraud and getting money on false pretences. I have to say there is no truth in the paragraph. I am not used, and have accused neither Rev. George Armstrong nor any other person, in the issue of August 13th or any other issue, of dishonesty, fraud or getting money on false pretences."

The Governor General. When recently in the Capital of Ontario, the Governor General was honored with a complimentary dinner at the Toronto Club. In responding to the toast of the banquet, he made, perhaps, the most able and eloquent speech which he has delivered on this side of the Atlantic. It was the brilliant effusion of a vigorous and sparkling mind, rich in imagery, faultless in phraseology, and admirable in adaptability to the occasion. Like his immediate predecessor on the Dominion Throne, his tongue-power will win the admiration, and secure the attachment, of the Canadian people.

BOYD THE GARDEN FROGGER TO THE LONDON.—LONDON, Sept. 30.—Boyd, who defeated Higgins so easily yesterday has adopted the American style of rowing and has Hanlan's method of perfection. He has employed Hanlan's old trainer, and will probably become the Canadian's great antagonist.

Agricultural.

Fall Planting of Fruit Trees. The fall is the best season for planting trees, except evergreens. Fruit and ornamental trees may be planted as early as possible in the season after the leaves have dropped and the wood has ripened. Until the ground is frozen below the roots these make a new growth, and become well established in the soil before the spring, when the abundant new root masses luxuriate in growth of wood and foliage. Thus a year in time is saved by planting in the fall. Those who intend planting should send to the nurseries for catalogues and select their varieties at once. In nurseries the rule is first to come first served, and entries filed are filled in succession. The cheapest trees are the smallest; but although it is said that the smallest trees are the most easily transplanted, yet the writer has never had the least difficulty in successfully planting trees eight feet high and of 4 or 5 years growth. Success depends upon good planting and the best rooted trees will fall if the roots are crowded into holes that are too small for them to be spread out. When the trees are received they should be unpacked at once and laid with the roots in a trench, then covered with fine earth, and the roots, earth and trees completely watered. When the planting time is arrived which should be the next day if possible, the trees are laid in the order in which they are to be set out in the orchard, in a wagon box, and the roots covered with earth. The holes are staked out at the proper distance apart; 20 to 24 feet will be sufficient; and at each hole is dug the top soil laid upon the side and the sub soil kept separate from it. A load of good mellow soil or compost should be taken in the wagon; the hole is dug large enough for the roots to spread out in their natural position. A little of the top soil is thrown into the hole, then some of the compost, and the tree is set upright in the line of the stakes, each way. Instead of stakes cross open furrows may be ploughed out at the proper distance apart, by which some digging will be avoided. As the trees are held up by one person, another, on his knees, arranges the bottom roots carefully and works the compost or rich soil between them. The top soil is then thrown with the degrees and the roots arranged precisely as they were in the ground before. When the roots are covered, the soil is packed down among them with a dibble or sharp pointed stick, and then the compost is thrown in. The sub-soil is put in last; but before this is done the soil is solidly trampled with the feet, with a left mound up two or three inches to allow for setting. If dry weather occurs a few barrels of water may be drawn in a wagon and a painful scattered about each tree. Some dry soil is then drawn over the mound earth. If good thrifty trees are procured and put in the ground in this manner, and carefully tended and protected, one may eat fruit in three years.

VEGETINE. Reports from Ottawa. OTTAWA, CANADA, Dec. 31st, 1878. Ma. H. R. STEVENS, Boston, Mass. Sir—I have used your Vegetine in my family for several years, and consider it an invaluable medicine. I most cheerfully recommend its use to those desiring a safe and effective remedy for diseases of the stomach and impurities of the blood. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption. The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvelous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering attendant to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs. As a safeguard to children, and the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health. This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.

Joker's Corner.

How He was Sold. An Italian gentleman with a nice little income had a nice little servant girl, who said to him one morning: "If you please, won't you give me three francs to buy a lottery ticket with? I dreamed last night that No. 41,144 was going to draw the capital prize and I want to buy that number." He gave the girl the three francs, and next day, on happening to look at the report of the drawing, saw that No. 41,144 had drawn the capital prize of $18,525.35 lire, or, to speak more accurately, $100,000. Returning quietly to the house he concealed his emotion and said to his servant girl: "Susan, I have long observed with approbation your piety, beauty, modesty, skill in the arts of cookery and other good qualities calculated to adorn the highest station. Be mine. Let me lead you to the bygone world. No delay. Just as you are." "Honest Injun?" said the blushing virgin. "You bet. I swear by yonder silver spoon that tips with beauty all the fruit of the top." "Then count me in, and regard me hereafter in the light of your turtle dove." Hasten, then, Susan; put on your bonnet and shawl, and let us walk around the block to the old friar's cell where we shall be one.

In a few minutes the bride-elect returned, clad in a red shawl, with a black velvet bonnet trimmed with snowflakes and Victoria girdle. They returned to the house, when the husband carelessly took up the paper and said, with a well counterfeited start of surprise: "Darling, everything is bright for us upon our wedding day. You remember the ticket in the lottery that you dreamed about and I gave you three francs to buy. Where is it, my sweet?" "Oh, I didn't buy it. I spent it for this duck of a bonnet."—New York World.

THE MAN WHO HADN'T A CENT.—Says the "Lewistown Gazette": Capt. Broughton of Portland told a story which we think too good to keep, which is as follows: Some time in '64 there was a number of army officers stopping at a hotel in Washington. Among them was a Capt. Emerson. There was also a Capt. Jones, who was a first-rate fellow, a good officer, and very pompous. Emerson and Jones used to have a good deal of joking together at the hotel, and elsewhere. One day at the dinner table, when the dining hall was well filled, Capt. Jones finished his dinner first, got up and walked almost to the dining hall door, when Emerson whispered to him in a loud voice, and said: "Hello, captain, see here: I want to speak to you a minute." The captain turned and walked back to the table and bent over him, when Emerson whispered: "I wanted to ask you how far you would have gone if I had not spoken to you." The captain never changed a muscle, but brightened up and put his finger into his vest pocket and said in a voice loud enough for all to hear him: "Capt. Emerson, I don't know of a man in the world I had rather lend $5 to than you, but the fact is, I haven't a cent with me to-day," he turned to Emerson and walked away. Emerson was the color of half a dozen rainbows, but he had to stand it. He never heard the last of it, and it cost him more than $10 to treat on it.

THE EVILS OF THE TERRIBLE.—The speeches of the Evils of the Terrible on his first appearance at church are many and singular—not to be Irish about it—and they have not all been printed, since the time his name was first mentioned in the paper of the writer, and he lived in Illinois—he was an Illinoiser, as Thatcher says. His mother had taken him to a concert, where there were great quantities of music. The piece which most captivated his youthful fancy was "Captain Jinks," which was sung with great effect by a sober-sided fellow. The next Sunday was Fred's first day at church, and he was much interested in the progress of the exercises, keeping very still during the reading, and nearly through the "long prayer," when, becoming somewhat restless, he pulled at his mother's dress and asked quite audibly: "Mamma, isn't it most time for 'Captain Jinks?'—Harper's Magazine.

A belated and rather poverty stricken foot-traveller, stopped at a small mansion of apparently two rooms, and a kitchen, in Mabou, the other evening, to get a night's lodging. As he stood timidly knocking at the half-opened door, he heard the shrieking tones of the lady of the house, denouncing the garrison for the night; "Tommy, go hunt up Charley and Ben and tell them to go to the grocery store and tell your father to bring Susan and Sam right home; it's the bed time, and if they see Louis on the way send her to Miss Juggins's for Alice and Jim, and see if they know where Ezra is; you take this lamp up to grandma's room and ask her if she won't take care of baby while I go and find Dick and while I am gone you undress Mabel and put her to bed, and if cousin Harry comes while I am gone tell him he's to sleep with you." And the traveller sighed and turned away so oppressed with a feeling of overcrowdedness, that he walked out of the country and slept all night in the middle of a field two miles long.

A WESTERN JURYMEN.—It was out West in one of those local courts where a friendly, talkative way marks the intercourse between judges, juries, counsellors, and clients. A man of the law, after developing considerable eloquence and perspiration in behalf of a prisoner, persecuted by saying: "Gentlemen, after what I have stated to you, is this man guilty? Can he be guilty? Is he guilty?" Greatly to his disgust, the foreman of the jury, after copious expectation replied: "You just wait a little, old hoss, and we'll tell you." As a poker-player would say: "Foreman had the best of us, and counsellor passed out."—Harper's Magazine.

The British Government has ordered an official enquiry to be made into the act of the Rev. Mr. Brown, Wesleyan fifty-four persons were incarcerated in central prison, Moscow, during the summer, ten thousand four hundred and seventy-seven of whom were condemned to Siberia.
