

your Lordship to deny or extenuate this glaring impropriety. You make money the chief requisite for admission to your Colleges, although it was ostentatiously paraded at their inception that their principal object was to provide a thoroughly sound, moral and cheap education for protestant children, and thus prevent them from being absorbed into convent schools; and yet, year after year, since their foundation, the fees for admission have been gradually increasing, so that it is now practically impossible for anyone to obtain entrance unless for the children of the wealthy; thus compelling those of more slender means to fill the convent schools.

And now, my Lord, in your future dealings with your fellow man, let me recommend for your earnest and prayerful consideration the well-known lines of our greatest poet:

“Who steals my purse steals trash,
But he who robs me of my good name, robs me of that
Which him enricheth not and leaves me poor indeed.”

I have the honor to remain

Your Lordship's obedient servant,

(Signed), HENRY GOING.

THE LORD BISHOP OF HURON,

Norwood House.

As the Bishop of Huron has not yet honored me with his promised reply, nor accepted my challenge conveyed to him in my last letter dated December the 14th, I will now proceed to offer a few remarks on the very grave charges contained in that letter. The practice of smoking and billiard playing, which has been indulged in by the pupils, is so notorious that I need only refer to it. As regards drunkenness, I will give one or two instances out of many: A boy convicted of drunkenness was brought before the Bishop and the head master. The whole school being assembled, his Lordship stated to the culprit, the son of a wealthy and influential man, that at the solicitation of his school fellows, no doubt unwilling to lose so pleasant a companion, he would refrain from expelling him. Another example: At one of my visits to the College during the past summer, I was requested by one of the masters, at present in the school, to see a boy who had been carried up to his dormitory by his schoolfellows. I did so, and found him in the last stage of
