

BEAR SAVES BRIDE FROM ICY PLUNGE

Hubby "Sics" Him on Charivari Party, and Plan to Duck Couple Fails.

Slab City, Vt., Oct. 10.—When the wedding was over and the blushing bride and stalwart bridegroom had been toolled away to the nearest railroad station amid showers of congratulations and rice Uncle Lem Green dangled his rheumatic legs from the veranda of the general store and sighed.

"Don't seem 's though these new-fangled weddin's was half as lively as them when I was a boy," he remarked, while the aggregation perched on wobbly chairs or wormed itself into semi-comfort on the creaking steps.

"That is, it don't seem 's though it was for the folks 'at looks on, though I s'pose the couple 'emselves is 'at'able well satisfied."

The aggregation nodded.

"I reckon they ain't," chuckled Luke Pettengill, his eyes twinkling and his mouth curving into a grin.

"I have heard that they played high jinks with the newly-weds," said the city guest, pulling a case of fragrant cigars from his pocket and passing them around with one hand, while he wore the other gracefully tucked inside his vest as though from force of habit.

"Well, I've heard of one exception," volunteered the guest. "It was told to me when I was a boy visiting in No-town and I never forgot it, for it was an old way of turning the tables on a charivari party."

The aggregation shuffled its feet and pricked up its ears in anticipation of a story.

"It was back in 1890, as I recall it," went on the guest, digging his hand deeper within his vest, "and, as you know, there was not a railroad in Vermont. There were no such things as bridal tours, and the bridegroom contented himself with taking his new wife to his farmhouse or cabin and beginning life in earnest. To this home the charivari party adjourned at night, and the good-natured indignities they heaped upon the couple were sad, exasperating and, at times, rough."

"In Notown the charivari spirit was particularly alive, having been nursed along until, at the time I speak of, it was as much as a man's life was worth to marry a girl in his own town. It had, in fact, reached its height of boisterous roughness when Jonathan Allen, a popular village youth, took the hand of Sally Pratt, in the holy bonds of matrimony. Jonathan had been too busy making a living with trap, gun and plow, and building a three-room cabin in the woods for his bride to take part in many village shindies, and when he was quietly informed by a tried and true friend that the town bucks were preparing to duck bride and bridegroom by dragging them to a pond he laid his own plans accordingly."

"Jonathan confided in Sally, who had already heard the news from a bosom friend, and received her permission to put his plan into execution. Buying an antiquated horse from a neighbor for a dollar, he tied a heavy spring trap on its back, shouldered his shotgun and set off up the mountain. That was the last seen of him until the day of the wedding."

"The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock in the evening, according to schedule, and an hour later the bridal couple set out for the cabin where the charivari party, chuckling to think what they were going to do to the newly-weds, congregated in the church sheds and received final instructions from 'Big Bill' Hodge, a rough and determined character who had been the village leader in similar escapades for twenty years."

"The plan was to sneak up to the cabin, force the door and drag the couple to the pond before they put the lights out for the night. Several members objected to ducking Mrs. Allen, but they were overruled, and the crowd got to the cabin just as a heavy thunder storm broke. The candles had already been extinguished, but nothing daunted "Big Bill" threw his weight against the door, and the next instant the party, cheering and shouting, burst into the main living room.

"It was expected that Jonathan, anticipating the invasion, would lend to the sport of putting up a fierce fight, but instead an athletic form glided to the kitchen door, opened it and sprang back, instantly the place was in pandemonium, for out of the kitchen rushed a snarling bear that plunged head first into the group of people. A vivid flash of lightning illuminated the extraordinary scene, and as the snarling, snarling beast, leaped for "Big Bill" he caught Allen's left hand in his jaws and bit off the thumb as cleanly as though a surgeon had severed it. The next blow relieved "Big Bill" of a chunk of his arm and a third dived him of part of his coat.

"Perhaps the crowd had run faster at some time, but they could never recollect just when it was, and when it was all over and Allen had bound up his wounded hand he declared that the trick was worth a thumb and the price of the diaphanous horse he had used for bear bait, as well as the trouble he had in capturing bruiser and getting him to the house."

"That's 'ere's a to'able hefty yarn for a stranger," admitted Uncle Lem when the tale had been finished, "but we folks 'round these parts sorter expect a reasonable amount of proof—that is, it sorter seem 's though we'd order have suthin' to hang to."

The city guest smiled indulgently, and drawing forth his left hand, held it up. "From it the thumb was missing, pointing to the place where the thumb should have been. 'Allen' was my great-grandfather, and the first son was born with a hand like this ever since. Queer, too, that it always itches just before a storm. Well, I do declare," he added suddenly, "if it isn't itching now! Boys, it will surely rain before morning and rain hard."

It did.

STRANGER BOTHERS MARGARET ANGLIN

Well-Known Canadian Actress Appeals to the Police for Protection.

New York, Oct. 10.—Representatives of Henry Miller yesterday asked the police of West Thirtieth street station to prevent Alfred Freund, a member of a well-to-do family in St. Louis, from further molesting his co-star, Margaret Anglin.

For two years the young man has been persecuting the actress with his attentions. No matter in what city she played, she frequently has found the young man outside the theater before and after the performance. She has seen him around her hotel corridors, letters, flowers and other tokens signed with the same name.

A peculiar part of the affair is that in none of the letters has there been any protestation of love. They have been simply desires expressed for an interview.

The efforts of the young man in this particular have not ended with Miss Anglin, but even Mr. Miller and other members of his staff have been sought at times and asked to arrange for the much-looked-for meeting.

And has long hair, wears glasses and has a mysterious air which gives him an air of eccentricity. He apparently is well supplied with money and stops at the best hotels. He holds no communication with any persons except those connected with the theater and clergymen.

Recently he persuaded a Catholic priest to ask Miller to arrange for a meeting with Miss Anglin on the ground that he had a communication of great importance to make.

Although there has been no particular threat of violence made by Freund, Miss Anglin's nervousness on the point of giving way. Freund appeared at the theater last Saturday evening and sat in the fifth row. He simply stared at her, but she was hardly able to proceed with her lines. The police have promised to look after the young man.

TRADE WITH BRITAIN

Commerce With Old Country Shows a Large Increase

London, Eng., Oct. 10.—An expert, commenting on the official returns just issued, said it must convince Canadians that Britain is ready to give the best values for all Canada can produce for many years. As a result of the good harvest of 1935 Canada sold $6,250,000 more wheat and flour in the first nine months of 1936, as compared with last year. The United States sent over 2 1/2 times as much as Canada, but probably Canadian wheat also was largely represented in the increase of $32,500,000 in the United States supply. American flour alone increasing $9,000,000. These increases are at the expense of Argentina, Russia and India. Canada's increase in cereals as a whole for the nine months is $5,000,000. How much room it left for Canadian enterprise is shown by the fact that Britain bought $530,000,000 worth of the foregoing commodities outside of Canada, mostly outside of the empire, in nine months.

SNOW AT CLEVELAND.

Cleveland, Oct. 10.—Heavy wet snow, driven by a high wind, fell here today. It is the most severe October storm since that of Oct. 5, 1892, and is general along Ohio's lake front.

LAMP EXPLODES.

Wingham, Oct. 10.—Last night while the family of Mr. John McAllister, in Cuires Township, seven miles north of here, were sitting in the kitchen of their home, a lamp exploded, and Mrs. McAllister, who was sitting by the table, was covered with the burning oil, and before the flames could be extinguished was fatally burned, even her ears dropping off.

After suffering a terrible agony, she died at noon today.

Mrs. McAllister was about 55 years of age and much respected in the neighborhood.

STIFF FIGHT OVER STANDARD OIL CO.

Ohio State Striving Hard to Prove Conspiracy Against Trade.

Findlay, O., Oct. 10.—Little actual progress marked the second day of the trial of the Standard Oil Company, of Ohio for conspiracy against trade. The argument was caused by the objections of the attorneys of the Standard to the character of evidence sought to be placed before the jury by the prosecution. In every instance, however, the ruling of Judge Banker, favored the prosecution.

The result was that the testimony of John D. Rockefeller, given in 1939 before the supreme court of the state, was admitted and carefully read to the jury by Attorney Phelps for the prosecution. Mrs. Ida M. Butts, the first witness of the trial, was then called to the stand. Mrs. Butts, the step-daughter of the late George M. Rice, an independent oil refiner of Marietta, Ohio, had acted as Mr. Rice's private secretary and was the executrix of his estate. She produced at the request of Attorney Phelps the certificates of original trust stock owned by Mr. Rice and scrip showing title to fractional shares of stock in the 20 subsidiary companies of the original trust. The text of these certificates was read to look into the record and Mrs. Butts excused. The final wrangle of the day began and last until adjournment at 4:30.

It resulted when Mr. Phelps offered as evidence a certified copy of the record in the office of the secretary of state of New Jersey, showing that in 1898 the Standard Oil Company of that state changed its corporate existence by increasing the numbers of its directors from three to nine.

It was argued by the defense that this certificate was unauthenticated and incompetent. Judge Banker reserved ruling on this point until tomorrow.

Answering the objection of Mr. Kline that the prosecution was not going outside the pleading in the case, Mr. Phelps said that the Valentine law under which the suit was brought was as broad as the world and as strong as Samson; that under it there was necessity of proving any trust agreement or naming the parties in any trade conspiracy. It was argued by the defense that the Valentine law was not intended to cover a conspiracy such as that which was being prosecuted.

And, further, if we had in our possession one-tenth the evidence against these places that Police Magistrate Hunt claims to have, and his facilities for searching out crime, there would have been something done before this. Why has he not put the county crown attorney to work?

Trusting, Mr. Editor, that you will give this statement a publicity equal to that obtained by the charges against Elgin citizens, and thanking you for the courtesy, we are:

HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR IT

This Charge Is Hurdled at the Slater Shoe by a Dealer.

"You are responsible, and you alone, for the importation of American Shoes into Canada," Mr. Slater was surprised when this charge was hurled at him by an indignant shoe man. He had opposed the suppression of the other Canadian Shoe Manufacturers for an increase in the Shoe Tariff, and stoutly and ably opposed it, his competitors admitted. But his opposition, he maintained, did not favor the foreign shoe.

This is the way the charge against the Slater Shoe Company was argued: "You give exclusive agencies for the Slater Shoe. Only one man in a town or city can have the agency. What are the other dealers in the town to do? Sit still, and allow the Slater shoe to get all the trade of people who want fine shoes? Not much, sir. We know that the only shoe that can stand up with your shoe in style and workmanship is the American Shoe!" And they have to have it. The buyer pays the duty, too.

THE POWER COMMISSION

68,100-Horsepower Said To Be the Smallest Quantity Applied For.

Toronto, Oct. 10.—A meeting of the hydro-electric power commission, held at the commission's offices this afternoon, Hon. Adam Beck presiding, was mostly devoted to the consideration of the formal applications approved by resolutions of the councils and wardens of the municipalities desiring to obtain electrical power. The minimum demand of these applications aggregates 68,100-horsepower.

As rapidly as possible the commission will furnish the various municipalities with complete information as to the approximate cost of supplying their demands. The complete list of municipalities whose requests are now before the commission follows: Toronto, London, St. Thomas, Berlin, Galt,

In the first place, as to the extent of the evil, we, too, have to pass these five rigs there at once, to say nothing of thirty. We have questioned men who pass them almost daily, and we know of none but the magistrate ever saw even ten. It is another case of a million cats in the back yard—there were cats, but not a million.

In the second place, as to the cause of this condition. It was not local opinion. As far as we can learn these were bawdy houses before the war. They are bawdy houses still, and if the magistrate's desired license system were returned to, doubtless these are the houses and these are the men that would again receive licenses, and be certified as respectable places by the officers of the Government, as they formerly were. Did he forget that the scandal he was investigating when he made his now notorious deliverance took place in a licensed, not in a local option hotel, and that it still holds its license? Local option is no more responsible for the immorality of these places than the keepers of them are responsible for the piety of the churches in Sparta. It is a way of humanity—an unjust way—to blame the best men for not preventing the sins of the worst men, and this is just what our friend on the bench has done. If he had directed his severity against the keepers and frequenters of these houses he would have made at least the thoughtless of them remember that they are in perilous ways, and would also have awakened in the decent people of the community the feeling that here is something abnormal that they must rise and rid themselves of. Instead, his words tend to the opposite effect, unintentionally, no doubt, but none the less certainly.

In the third place, it is not the private citizen, but the appointed and salaried custodians of law and order, the officers of the crown, who are chargeable with inaction in this case. The undersigned and other private citizens have most earnestly and po-stently, but vainly, endeavored to arouse these to action in regard to liquor selling in the houses referred to. We did not have information that would warrant proceedings on other charges. Our experience was as follows: Local option became law in Yarmouth township on May 1, 1935. Previous to this we had sent a deputation to interview the newly-appointed license inspector for East Elgin, and received assurance that he would faithfully enforce the law. If we saw anything wrong we had only to write him, and he would come right up. Some time after May 1 word was sent him that we had evidence that would justify his searching these houses for liquor, but he did not come. We wrote again, saying we had laid information before a magistrate, and that he was prepared to issue warrants to search three houses. His response was to send the information, with our names—a breach of the law governing his office—to a political friend, who took upon himself the duty of discouraging us. We wrote again, and he came, and we found that he knew far more about what went on in these houses than we did. He spent much time watching the Sparta public house, which nobody ever complained of, and nobody ever suspected of liquor-selling—a house that was bought by the temperance people of Sparta in order that they might control it. After this insult he left Yarmouth, without going near the houses complained of, but promising that he would search them immediately. We waited. Two months or more went by, and the inspector and the M.P.P. for East Elgin drove by one of the suspected houses, and returned later in the day, preceded by a telephone message that was delivered from a magistrate's office, announcing his coming. He came, went into the bar and into the cellar and went away, much praised by the occupant of the house.

We wrote again, giving him to May 1, one year from the time the law came into force, to get convictions, or we would complain to the department. No answer. We addressed a courteous complaint to the Hon. W. J. Hanna. It was not even acknowledged. We recently called at the Provincial Secretary's office in Toronto, but unfortunately he was out. Next we are heralded over the province as moral cowards, inactive in the face of open vice, etc., ad nauseam. And there follows a grandiose proclamation of a Government investigation. We shall see what the government will do. If its paid officers put forth one-half the effort for a clean community that we, unpaid, have added to our already busy lives, we shall have an unheard of cleanup.

And, further, if we had in our possession one-tenth the evidence against these places that Police Magistrate Hunt claims to have, and his facilities for searching out crime, there would have been something done before this. Why has he not put the county crown attorney to work?
