THE U. S. TARIFF

(Special to Times and Montreal Star)

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—It is anticipated that the Democrats will make their heaviest cuts in the rates under the schedule of agricultural products and provisions. As pointed out yesterday a wide extension of the free list in this connection is advocated Republican members of the House say that the Democrats' proposal would undoubtedly lead to a keen fight in the senate where the Democratic majority will be small. So evenly balanced are the two main parties in the upper house, it was added, that the progressive will probably hold the balance of power and secure for themselves a position of immense strength.

In contrast with this statement, Democrats express the confident hope that a number of Republican senators will favor their position and secure passage of their measure.

(Canadian Press)

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—A score of people whose interests are affected by the agricultural schedule were on the witness list when the house committee on ways and means today resumed its tariff hearings.

Chairman Underwood has been indicating the general ideas of the committee from time to time during the testimony. Much of the evidence on the various schedules has borne out the committee's view as a factor in the consideration of the tariff.

Mr. Underwood has indicated that, while the committee feels that it is important, it is not the only consideration in solving the problem of the difference in the production cost.

The management, the man at the head of the plantation or factory, says Mr. Underwood, sometimes performs service without a great deal more than all the labor cost by reason of his being a man of executive ability and of getting work out of his labor and of generally getting results. I think this is generally true of all agricultural questions.

HIS WIFE'S MESSAGE

The Next Door Neighbor—I say this infernal row you are making—I am—my head—of—can't stand it.

Merry-making Paterfamilias (fixing him)—Oh, and what have you to say about it? The Next Door Neighbor, nothing whatsoever. Enjoy yourself by all means; but I—er—thought I'd give you my wife's message.

WHY SHE WORRIED.
There was evidently something on Mrs. Nervie's mind. For several days she had been very much preoccupied, and finally Nervie himself, fearful that he might in some way have been the cause of it, made certain inquiries designed to clear up the situation.

"I hope you didn't mind my coming in so late, from the club last Tuesday night, Maria," he said. "One o'clock is an unholy hour, I know; but, really, I couldn't help it very well. You see—"

"Not at all, James, dear," the good lady answered. "I should hate to have your friends think you were neglectful. Really, I was glad you stayed as long as you wanted to."

Nervie drew a deep sigh of relief. "Then what is the matter with you, Maria?" he demanded. "You can't deceive me. You are worrying about something."

"I certainly am," said the lady, her voice tremulous. "I am very much worried. Do you think the people at our bank are honest, James?"

"Why, certainly," laughed Nervie. "Whatever made you think they weren't?"

"Well, something very strange has happened lately," said Mrs. Nervie, "and I think you ought to look into it. You know you have been giving me my allowance lately in bank notes, and I have been depositing them at the bank?"

"Yes, I am aware of that," said Nervie.

"Well, somehow or other I don't like the look of that receiving teller, James," said the lady, "and so for the last three weeks I have been putting my initials on every note deposited, up in one corner, and yesterday Mr. Clavert, the butcher, catching a check for me, handed me one of those marked notes."

"What of it?" Nervie asked. "Don't prove that these bank people are letting other people use your money?"

It was at this point that Nervie was attacked by a violent spasm of coughing, which, in her description of it to the doctor, Mrs. Nervie declared was so like a laugh that at first she believed her lung had had suddenly thought of something funny.

HEIRESS GAVE UP ALL FOR ART

Wealth, Luxury, Home; Now Sensation of Paris

PAINTS A MASTERPIECE

The Story of Mrs. Romaine Brooks—Allowance Cut Off by Mother and Lived in Poverty in Rome and Paris

(Times Special Correspondence)

Paris, Jan. 20.—Born of great wealth and reared in luxury, yet deserting all at the call of art and, defying a stern, unbending parent, living in actual poverty in a Roman garret—such is the romance of Mrs. Romaine Brooks, an American woman, who is the sensation of the moment in the Paris art world.

Her painting of "Annunzio," a veritable rendering of the Italian author's soul, has placed her as one bound in the very forefront of modern artists.

Mrs. Brooks' father was a member of the famous and fabulously wealthy Goddard family of Providence, U.S.A. Her mother had an insatiable passion for foreign travel, and the future artist was born in Rome. Indeed, most of her life has been spent on this side of the Atlantic.

About Mrs. Brooks' mansion in the Avenue Trudaine there is no evidence of the long period of poverty which marked the student days of its owner, for the unworldly painter has passed away and the daughter has come into the fortune which the parent deprived her during her lifetime.

The heroine of this romance of art showed no unwillingness to tell the story in her own words when the writer called upon her today.

"As a child I soon wearied of the continual pulling up of the 'lent sticks' and moving from one fashionable resort to another," she said. "The life of a society girl did not interest me. I was bored by the opportunity to draw. My mother humored, as she thought, a passing whim and brooded professors, but constant change of residence was fatal to progress. Then came the revolt. A change of scene brought the inevitable travel. I urged my mother to allow me to remain in Paris with my companion, and so persistent were my applications that at last she gained her consent. A plan of action, long dormant in my brain, only awaited the right moment to bring it to a crisis. The time had now arrived.

"After my mother's departure I counted my money and found I had about $500. At that least would get me to Italy. In a badly concealed state of excitement I nervously packed a small trunk with the plainest things I had. Elaborate gowns and jewelry I left behind me. I was equipped with a hand-bag. I stole from the house of my mother, and I was on my way to the frontier.

"I was still in my teens—I felt to travel. Then came the revolt. A change of scene brought the inevitable travel. I urged my mother to allow me to remain in Paris with my companion, and so persistent were my applications that at last she gained her consent. A plan of action, long dormant in my brain, only awaited the right moment to bring it to a crisis. The time had now arrived.
