Across the Atlantic in an Anchor Line Steamer—The Captain Plays the Fiddle—Passage Icebergs—Our Correspondent holds Spiritual Conversation with a Clergyman.

GLEADOW, June 2, 1875.
Of all the treats enjoyed by the summer tourist, a trip across the Atlantic, in a first-class steamer, provided with a thoroughly efficient Captain and officers, superior cooks and stewards, an abundance of provisions, fine weather and smooth water, is beyond doubt the most enjoyable, providing the tourist is a thorough sailor and not addicted to "feeding the fishes and Mother Carey Chickens" every morning.

It was fortunate enough to meet with such a steamer in the Sidiouan—Anchor Line, James Henderson, commander; G. Clements, chief officer; H. Gamble, 2nd do.; W. Campbell, chief steward; and Mr. Johnson, purser. Having crossed the Atlantic a number of times, I can with safety say that never before, with all my experience, did I pass so pleasant a time on the ocean. The captain is affable and gentlemanly, always in good humor, and ever ready with a humorous story. The officers, without exception, are courteous and obliging, and the culinary department perfect.

Leaving Partridge Island at 4.30 p. m. on the 20th May, we steamed down Seal Island, bearing north by east, and distant about 8 miles, the wind continuing light and variable until about 10 p. m. when a light breeze sprang up, force and direction changing from variable to west, and continuing until about 10 when the fog again came down upon us, we being then on the outer edge of the Banks. From 10.30, until 3 p. m. took soundings, landing nothing at 30, 22 and 35 fathoms, and at 4.30, the vessel was again cleared up, and at 7.30 we sounded no bottom to 40 fathoms.

At 7.30 a. m. a land about was heard on the shore as Wm. Schaff launched his shell, the James A. Chambers, and paddled to the stake boat. A few minutes later another cheer came from the shore. The York stepped into his shell, and paddled to the stake boat. The York stepped into his shell, and paddled to the stake boat.

James Doehring did not fully appreciate his acquisition when he married a young and languishing girl in Louisville, Kentucky. Now he is better informed, because at the end of the first week she threw him down stairs and broke both his legs.

Mr. Nichols, whose publishers have no attraction sought, this month appears with a story for boys by Bret Harter. "Baby Sylvester" is in this writer's best vein. It should be known that the baby is a grizzly bear of tender years. Sheppard and J. C. Beard handle the number. As usual, running over with exquisite pictures and in every way delightful. The poet Bryant contributes a translation; and an article on fire-crackers gives information concerning the mysterious inscriptions on the picks of these mysterious playthings, which much more than interests boys about this time.

The investigation into the disaster to the transatlantic steamer L'Americaine has just been completed by the committee appointed by the French Government. According to the report of the committee the vessel was not weakened by the lightning stroke, and it is even now perfectly sound. It appears that the vessel had on board a new English double circulation pump, a piece of machinery concerning whose operation the Chief Engineer was so ignorant that all the time he was trying to pump the water out of the hold he was diligently pumping it into the hold. Under these circumstances it was not remarkable that the vessel should have filled rapidly, and if the officers had not given up and abandoned the ship, they would doubtless have succeeded in slaking her fire, by continuing their lightning.
