HOLDS UP HER MILK.

I bought a cow a few days ago about four years old which I believed would make a good dairy cow, at least she had many indications of being such; but was disappointed. After calving and taking the calf away I found she would not give her milk down, at least, she would not give it all down, only a very little, only enough to keep the calf alive. She has raised two calves herself before. Now, is there anything a person can do to make a cow give her milk down, when the calf is taken off? She is very quiet and I have handled her carefully.

Maple Creek.

Ans.—This is one of the vexatious peculiarities of the bovine feminine, and demands great patience on the part of the owner. You might give her some bran and oat chop, while milking and it would be a good plan to tie the calf up close beside her during milking time.

AN UNSATISFACTORY WELL.

I had a well drilled two years ago, it is one hundred and seven feet to the quick sand, the hole is six inches inside the casing, the water raises within fifty feet of the top. Quick sand came up so that the water was all riled and there would be an inch to two inches of sand in a pail of water after it would settle. I filled the casing up with sand and gravel for thirty feet, the sand still came up. I then filled it up about forty five feet and no water came. I then punched it down with a drill into the sand, and got a point and put it down about eighty feet, there came up a fine slime of sand all over the point, and stopped the water coming into the point. I then put three loads of gravel down into the sand; the water is clear now, but I can only take four barrels until the pump begins to suck air. I want to fix it so that I can get enough to run a threshing engine out of it. Please tell me what to try. I was thinking of getting a hole bored about thirty inches diameter and tapping the casing about every ten feet, so the water could run into it. I was going to crib the hole for about twenty feet from the top, then plaster it with cement the rest of the way down. What do you think of my plan?

Man.

Ans.—The above question referred to H. Cater, proprietor Brandon Pump Works who says, "Re a remedy for your well if you had filled it up about twenty feet with very coarse gravel and stones, with no sand in it, you would have had better results. As it is I do not think you can expect to get more than four barrels of water at a time, the well being only six inches, and is not likely to supply a threshing engine under present conditions. You are not very far astray in your remedy; but I do not think it necessary to crib it with cement all the way down. I would advise reversing your plan, and put in a two inch plank crib in the bottom within about ten feet of the top, and then crib the ten feet at the top with cement, and you will have a well that will last nearly a life time.

You ought to sink the larger well at least seventy five or eighty feet and tap it about ten feet from the bottom. That will leave a good basin in which the water can accumulate when you are not using it, and if it is a good spring you will always have an abundant supply.

PROBABLY RHEUMATISM—PECULIAR CASE.

1. Have a horse, aged, seems to be something wrong with right hind leg. When a change of weather may be expected he stands with right leg held high up, sometimes for several minutes at a time; sometimes trembles violently all over, sweating profusely at such times. Bought the animal a year ago not knowing anything was wrong with him. Doesn't show any sign of lameness when working. What is the matter, and what should I do for him?

2. Have a driving horse. It is necessary to keep a tight line on the right side or he swerves off to the left. Have let the lines loose when he begins to travel in a circle, and I believe would cramp the rig and upset it where he allowed to continue. Haven't observed

Health is happiness. It is the foundation-stone of the happy family. It is success in business; it is contentment and self satisfaction. You enter your home after your day's work, and even though tired, your buoyancy fills the house with joy and pleasure. Your friends seek you, and you are the centre of all that is true wealth—perfect happiness, cheer and contentment. All the money in the world cannot give you those if you have lost your health.
