OSAP fraud doesn't pay . . .

By CHRISTINE L. GOMES

"Many have tried, but few are convicted." This handy phrase could be applied to any number of situations, but in this instance it refers to the number of people who cheat on their Ontario Assistance Program (OSAP) applications.

Students are often regaled by the stories of how their friends have "beaten the system," or those less fortunate who were not able to get funding because "their parents had too much money." The stories never heard are of those who allegedly got through, but eventually got caught.

One such case involves Jerry G. Bartko, a student attending York University in 1985/86. Bartko stated on his application that he would not be living at home, when in fact he stayed there throughout the school year. Bartko did not count on thorough investigations done by the Ministry of College and Universities' (MCU) student awards branch, which, according to the Imprint, works in conjunction with two police agencies. Inquiries are made into the Revenue Canada records—public records concerning such things as vehicle ownership—as well as third party allegations. Earlier this year, Bartko pleaded guilty to the charge that he supplied false information to OSAP and was given a conditional discharge and six months probation. He was also disqualified from receiving further assistance from the programme.

According to MCU, the largest OSAP fraud case involved a Waterloo couple whom they were able to charge with the aid of the OPP. Lena and Paul Schuler, aged 34 and 37 respectively, used legitimate student documents to swindle OSAP out of $174,830.00. Paul Schuler received a nine-month jail sentence for his efforts. For her part in the swindle, Lena Schuler was required to perform 100 hours of community service during her two-year probation period.

U of Calgary
buries its dead

by Ken Schmaltz

The remains of fifty people who donated their bodies for medical research to the University of Calgary's Faculty of Medicine were buried on Wednesday, September 23 at 1:30 p.m. in Queen's Park Cemetery.

A brief interment ceremony was held to honor the donors and acknowledge their contributions to medicine and society. . . .

The University holds a commemorative burial ceremony every few years as the cadavers are used and replaced with new donations. The cremated remains are buried in a large plot owned by the university at Queen's Park Cemetery.

According to Dr. Richard Hannah the Faculty of Medicine's Anatomy Department, (in an effort to keep a sense of goodwill with the community), the next of kin is free to claim the donor's remains for private burial at any time. He emphasized the reliance of the medical school on the community's continued support in the form of donated bodies in order to preserve the quality of medical education offered.

The donated bodies are used at all levels of post-secondary education, from undergraduates to resident medical students. Greg Schmaltz, a second year medical student, explained, "The study of cadavers is very important as it allows us to learn the structure of the human body and how it works in a way which is impossible using books and models alone."

People interested in donating their bodies for medical research can obtain an informative booklet and forms from the Faculty of Medicine. Signing the back of a driver's licence is not legally binding, and since the remains of deceased persons become the property of the next-of-kin it is ultimately their decision on whether the body will be donated.

Manure works in weird ways

This submission mysteriously appeared and no one was willing to take credit for it.

IF YOU ARE UNHAPPY... Once upon a time there was a nonconforming sparrow who decided not to fly south for the winter. However, soon the weather turned so cold that he reluctantly started to fly south. In a short time ice began forming on his wings, and he fell to the earth in a barnyard almost frozen.

A cow passed by and crapped on the little sparrow. The sparrow thought that it was the end. But, the manure warmed him and defrosted his wings. Warm and happy, able to breathe he started to sing. Just then a large cat came by and hearing the chirping, investigated the sounds.

The cat cleared away the manure, found the chirping bird and promptly ate him.

THE MORAL OF THE STORY IS:

- 1) Everyone who shits on you is not necessarily your enemy
- 2) Everyone who gets you out of shit is not necessarily your friend.
- 3) And if you're warm and happy in a pile of shit, keep your damn mouth shut
