

MISTAKES AT ROYAL COURTS.

The queen's drawing-rooms, as the receptions given by Great Britain's Queen are called, are exceedingly formal occasions, guests and attendants being governed by certain fixed rules as inviolable as the laws of the Medes and Persians.

In a moment one of these court officials in attendance hastened to her rescue, and she was with difficulty and amid scarcely suppressed merriment restored to her feet again.

In another case it is said that while a certain highly placed lady was in the act of kissing the Queen's hand, a substantial portion of her front hair became detached and fell on the floor at the royal feet, leaving the lady with a frontal exposure more eloquent of intellect than beauty.

A pretty story is told of a fair debutante, the most beautiful girl of her year, and fine presentation to court, who was on the point of retiring after kissing the hand of our present queen, who was taking the place of Queen Victoria, when in her exceeding nervousness she stood on her train and would have fallen, had not a court official, whose duty it was to be prepared for such contingencies, caught her in his arms.

Not many weeks later the young lady and her rescuer found themselves guests at the same country house and turned their singular introduction to such good account that within a year the wedding bells were set a-ringing.

It is not at all an uncommon experience for a lady—relying on the usual crowded drawing room and in order to avoid a long wait and a crush—to put off her arrival too long and miss the function altogether.

But these amusing adventures are by no means confined to the royal presence. The present practice is for a lady when she leaves the throne room to give her name to an official, who telephones for her carriage to be ready for her.

"If No One Ever Marries Me." If no one ever marries me— And they don't seem very keen, For I can't pretend I'm handsome, And my purses is rather lean— If no one ever marries me, I'll get along all right— I shall play at golf the whole day through, And at bridge the livelong night.

I shall have a little sailing yacht, And a motor all my own, And I shall be plagued with children's bills For things that they've outgrown, And when I'm sick of everything, And dull as dull can be, I shall think how glad I've made some girl Who didn't marry me— By a Bachelor, with apologies, In Punch.

Consumption

The only kind of consumption to fear is "neglected consumption."

People are learning that consumption is a curable disease. It is neglected consumption that is so often incurable.

At the faintest suspicion of consumption get a bottle of Scott's Emulsion and begin regular doses.

The use of Scott's Emulsion at once, has, in thousands of cases, turned the balance in favor of health.

Neglected consumption does not exist where Scott's Emulsion is.

Prompt use of Scott's Emulsion checks the disease while it can be checked.

A Philadelphia boy, five years of age, who had recently become the brother of another little boy, was sent to the grocery store the other day to get some loaf sugar.

By mistake the grocer gave him granulated, and the boy was sent back to have it changed.

"How do you like your new brother?" asked the grocer, as he was weighing out the right kind of sugar.

"Oh, I don't like him very much," the little fellow answered. "He cries all the time."

"Why don't you change him, then, as you do the sugar?" "We can't change him now, 'cause we've used him three days."

Reflections of a Bachelor. Most men carry success as gracefully as they do too much liquor.

When you kiss a girl with freckles they never taste the way they look they would.

"And I feel sad," replied the young man. "I asked Miss Sullivan to be my wife, and she declined the honor."

"That's too bad," said the parson. "But it's in accord with the Scriptures, which says: 'Ye asked and received not, because ye asked amiss.'"

"Well, what would you advise me to do?" queried the youth. "Next time ask a widow," replied the good man, with a suspicious twinkle in his eye.—Pittsburg Press.

Burnt His "Breeches." An eminent Chicago lawyer tells me this story, says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle:

"My father always took a great interest in musical matters, and was often the patron of impecunious musicians. Among the latter I remember a certain Professor Schell, a fine pianist, who used to visit our house. The professor had been making a hard but unsuccessful struggle, had become almost disheartened, and was seriously thinking of giving up and returning to Germany. My father, who thoroughly liked him, had tried to encourage him, and had promised to aid him in finding pupils; but still the professor vacillated for many weeks. One afternoon he entered our library, followed by my father, and, walking solemnly up to my mother, said, with an air of profound gravity:

"Madam, I have burnt my breeches behind me."

"Good gracious!" ejaculated my mother, with an involuntary, startled glance in the direction of the professor's coat tails.

"My father interposed tactfully, the professor manfully nodding acquiescence: 'You will be glad to know, my dear, that what Professor Schell means by saying he has burnt his breeches behind him is that he has burnt a house here for a year and has now no shoes but to stomp on!'"

"Oh!" exclaimed my mother, greatly relieved. "How delightful!"

TEMPTATIONS OF MIDDLE AGE

One the "I Am Holier Than Thou" Attitude Toward Youth.

I know no such persistent temptation for the middle-aged, none so subtle in its nature nor so disastrous in its consequences, as that which makes us like to seem to our juniors not only established in altogether virtuous ways, but as if we had been so established all our lives.

It is not, I think, a very courageous attitude to take, especially before the young, who have no means of knowing what rapidly we, their elders, have encountered when guiding to a present safety the frail crafts of our character.

The young, whose very nature it is to feel the differences that distinguish them as individuals from the rest of mankind, never fancy themselves so isolated as when they witness some of the older ones harbored in quiet ports apparently unassailed by temptations. Then it is that by very contrast the young imagine themselves as controlled by an adverse fate which has sent them adrift and alone on the sea of wild temptations over which no respectable old person ever encountered when sent to sail. So it might be made to feel so, so I ask myself often, gratifying as it may be to us to be venerated? Oportune people are considered ill-bred who do not think of the young as culpable for the virtuous elderly person to make the young stumble feel himself a sinner.—April Century.

long and miss the function altogether. But at least one lady just managed to save the situation by a tour de force.

The drawing room was over and the royal group was preparing to make its exit when a sound of voices in dispute was heard just outside the door. "But I must go in!" a high-pitched voice was heard to exclaim, and a moment later in sailed the belated owner of the voice, flushed with haste and argument, and made her way toward the royal group, with an encouraging smile the queen turned toward her and extended her hand; the lady courtesied and retired, jubilant at the thought that she had had her way, even in a royal palace.

Less fortunate was a debutante who on the eve of her presentation was seized with an illness which made it impossible for her to attend the court. Her name was sent in for the next drawing room, but again she was disappointed, for her father's death made attendance impossible for at least a year, and when at last there seemed a prospect of success at the third attempt she met with a fatal accident in the hunting field and died on the very day when she should have made her courtesy to the queen.

On at least one occasion a debutante secured a presentation without going through any of the necessary formalities, and certainly without the responsible official. In the middle of the state function a peddle, which had in some incomprehensible way evaded the guardians of the portals, trotted into the room, cast an indifferent and by no means respectful glance through the opposite door, quite ignorant of his glaring defiance of all court etiquette.
