sentimental one—perhaps it hardly could have been such—but her heart tightened as she saw her face upon his portrait, and she hoped her cheeks bore no witness to her feelings.

Beside her father's picture was one of a handsome and vigorous young man, whom she at once guessed to be her cousin.

The dining-room was dimly lighted by candles placed in an old silver candelabra on the center of the table, at which Anthony and his sister occupied their usual positions. The supper itself was a mere oasis amid a desert of table-cloth, but this was only because the table was so big.

Miss Nugent had her arm before her, and Anthony was enthralled behind the very Irish dish of boiled fowl, flanked by another dish of what Miss Nugent had called "fry."

The turf fire, which had probably been lighted chiefly with a view of decoration, gave the great dining-room an almost comfortable glow.

"And is this your first visit to Ireland, Mrs. Lytton?" asked Anthony.

"Yes," said Dora.

"I heard the lounge for the first time to-day."

"Were you long in Paris?" asked Miss Nugent.

"Some little time. I went there with my husband, but since his death I have always wanted to get away from it."

This Dora said in a tone which suggested that the subject thus opened was one she did not care to pursue, and Anthony and Barbara waited for another cue from her.

The telescope seemed a safe topic.

"And what kind of a telescope are you proposing to get, Mr. Nugent? What diameter, for instance?"

"I've been thinking," said Anthony gravely, "that that's a matter I want some consideration. What's your own opinion now, Mrs. Lytton?"

"Happily for her astronomical reputation Dora kept her business well in mind while journeying from Paris, and on her way through London had spent an hour in a first-rate instrument-maker's, where her acquisitive mind had primed itself to some purpose. She said:

"I was not quite sure from your advertisement whether you had built your observatory or were about to build it, but as an instrument-maker's in London and brought away a catalogue."

"Did you now?" said Anthony delightedly.

"Was I to assure you, the telescope yet, and—"

"And you were just waiting for counsel, in fact," said Barbara. Mrs. Lytton has her place empty. Anthony.

"Ah! ye may put it that way if ye like," said Anthony. "I'm not one to be hurried in my movements in matters I'm not perfectly sure of. I've been wanting to buy, I'd not have asked a word of help from a telescope, ye see, Mrs. Lytton, isn't as full yet as I hope will be."

"You and your catalogue together," said Barbara. "Will beat the Royal Irish Observatory."

"And if Mrs. Lytton will eat no more," said Barbara, "she'll be better able to bear it if it'll wish her good-night and let her go."

But Dora pleaded for five minutes' stroll on the terrace, where the air blew up from the lake and made a pleasant rustle amid the branches of the trees. The old tower was just visible in the still shimmering light of the summer eve. The comedy and the pathos of the situation were equally strong in Dora's mind; and she did not know whether to laugh at the curious old man, her uncle beside her, or to weep over the willful part which was responsible for bringing her, a disingenuous stranger to her father's home.

CHAPTER IX.
BARBARA FINDS AN ALLY.

Anthony and Barbara were first at the breakfast-table on the following morning. Dora was a brisk rider in general, but she had lain awake through more than half the night, thinking, wondering, making fresh and unmaking her impossible projects; and in her sleep, when it came at last, had been dreamful and disquieting. She was not awake when Kate had called.

"Well," said Anthony, "and how d'ye like me as astronomer from Paris?"

"I haven't had her out of my mind since I said good-night to her," said Barbara. "Anthony, I wonder whether ye'll laugh at me, but time after time last night, when I was talking, I thought I was listening to the voice of Keadagh. And ye may laugh or not, Anthony, but I declare she has a look of him."

"Faith I'm with ye there," said Anthony. "The very same thought was with me. And did ye mind the way she rubbed her ear with her forefinger, just as Keadagh used to do?"

Bound To Tell It.

And this is the way it begins in the interest of other sufferers: 2025 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa., U.S.A., Jan. 22, 1890.

"Unquestionably, allow me to say my testimonial to your grand and glorious remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. A short time ago my left ankle and foot began to swell and became nearly twice their natural size. Sleep was impossible. I finally used St. Jacobs Oil. I found relief from the first application, and a permanent cure after using half a bottle. I would not again be without it. If it cost $5 a bottle, J. E. Still. Such a remedy is beyond price."

Old friend—Don't you remember sweet Alice, who danced with delight when you gave her a smile and trembled with fear at your frown? Mr. B. Bolt, jun.—Oh yes, she doesn't care a cent for my smiles or frowns either now. We're married.

A man's wife should always be the same especially to her husband; for if she is weak and nervous and uses Carter's Iron Pills, she cannot be the same. They will make her feel like a different person, at least so they say, and their husbands say so, too.

Ellie—You're just the person I've been wanting to help me pick out an engagement present for Miss De Gush, who is to marry Mr. Softleigh. What would you suggest? Belle—Don't you think a lovely spoon would be the most appropriate?

Carter's Little Liver Pills must not be confounded with common Cathartics or Purgatives. Pills as they are entirely unlike them in every respect. One trial will prove their superiority.

He wish ye had been wanting to buy, I'd not have asked a word of help from a telescope, ye see, Mrs. Lytton, isn't as full yet as I hope will be."

Tea gone name of Dr. Doremund's German preparation for the hair. It really works and cures itching scalp, dandruff, and is unequalled for restoring the lost vitality of the hair roots. It is first-class. All druggists sell it.

Badges—How is your friend coming on with his suit over the larceny of Miss Olden's effects? Brooks—He'll get off light. They were shown to be so shop-worn that she will accept a pair of pants larceny.

Ask Your Friends About It.

Your distressing cough can be cured. We know it because Kemp's Balsam within the past few years has cured so many colds and coughs in this community. Its cough-syrup has been won entirely by its genuine merit. Ask some friend who has used it what he thinks of Kemp's Balsam. There is no medicine so pure, none so effective. Large bottles 50 cents and $1 at all druggists.
