A CONQUEROR AGAINST HARD ODDS.

Marvin Clark, the Blind Newspaper Writer of New York City.

Any afternoon of the week one may see in the reading room of the Press Club a middle-aged man with a slight gray moustache sitting at a table, smoking a cigar and listening with an air of close attention to a boy who is reading a newspaper in an undertone. If a member of the club lounges up to the table and says, "Hello, Marvin," the listener will turn his head with a smile and say: "Why, how are you?" adding the name of the man, whether Smith, Jones, or Robinson.

Said, "but I suppose it presented opportunities for adventure and excitement which fascinated nee. Twenty-three years ago I was an apprentice on board an English ship trading in the Polynesian archipalish ship trading in the Polynesian a Phantom Ships.

The history of the sea deals with many strange accounts of spectre ships, but none more startling than that of the Flying Dutchman, which has been told in narrative and music for two hundred years.

According to tradition a Holland vessel, called the Braave, sailed from Amsterdam in the year 1652, with a noted Dutch mer chant skipper named Cornelius Vander-deach day. Added to this is the gossip he hears from his friends, the newspaper men. He is thus able to comment upon the news or to store up what he has learned for future use. In his thirty years of experience in New York newspaper work he has gathered a vast amount of information about men and things. Further, he has a still greater amount of knowledge of where things are to be got, if he does not know the details or remember accurately.

According to tradition a Holland vessel, called the Braave, sailed from Amsterdam in the year 1652, with a noted Dutch mer chant skipper named Cornelius Vander-decken in command. In due time the Braave reached Batavia, discharged her cargo, loaded again, and sailed for home. When in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope, a succession of heavy westerly gales not only prevented the vessel from rounding the cape, but drove her further and further eastward. Time and again the vessel mot know the details or remember accurately.

Through these sources he is ready to furnish special articles upon all sorts of subjects. The newspaper special article is a root important feature of the newspaper, especially of the Sunday edition. Mr. Clark can write interesting specials upon things that are. He has only to think of a good subject. If there is reading to be done his boy can do it for him. If a man is to be interviewed, his boy can lead him to the man. Were it not that this roundabout method took too much time he could do the routine newspaper news work.

Maddened by these repeated failures, Captain Vanderdecken openly defied the Almighty, and swore that he would pass the cape by aid of the Evil One. The legand runs that owing to this blasphemy the ship was doomed to struggle helplessly against head wind forever in this desolate ocean.

a blind man to do newspaper work, when the newspaper is above all things a record of things seen. But latterly they are getting used to him, and now his articles appear regularly in many New York and Brooklyn papers.

He has borne his affliction with a courage and cheerfulness that is amazing, that shows the resources of his character. From the first he faced the situation as if he could see it, and he has never staggered under the several blows that have struck him—the beginning of the failure of his sight, the total darkness, the announcement of a great specialist that he would never see again. "What is the use of complaining?" said he. "No one but a blind man can begin to understand what this darkness means—thi; total dependence upon others. But I must work. I have to keep my mind occupied with my work and that passes my days. Latterly I have been frombled with insomnia. Each morning at 3 o'clock I wake up and can sleep no more. What can I do? I cannot read. No one can come aud talk to me at that time of the past that time of the past that the world by the two sons of the Prince of Wales on board the English frigate, Canada. These two young men, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, were at that time midshipmen in the Royal Navy, and the former, who died more than a year ago, enjoyed flattering prospects of some day being known as King Albert of England. After the return from this voyage the brothers edited a book of their travels, in which the entire with the Flying Dutchman is lucidly set forth. As the story goes, one night while their vessel was at sea several degrees to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, the watch on deck distinctly saw the spectre ship beating against a head wind, and observed the figures of men leaning over the bulwarks in the act of staring at the English mano-of-way for the former, who died more than a year ago, enjoyed flattering prospects of some day being Montal Travella, in the former, who died more than a year ago, enjoyed the travels, in which the flying Dutchman is lucid read. No one can come and talk to me at that time. I must lie there in the dark-ness, helpless and alone, waiting for daylight and the boy who is eyes to me. That is my greatest hardship, and must confess that sometimes my philosophy is not equal to the writing of fiction stories. He has written several and has had good success with them, and he hopes, as he gets accus-tomed to thinking in that line, to improve his work up to a good standard. He has the necessary equipments of a good style and a good imagination, and he can evolve his plots out of the storehouse of his excel-lent memory, which is full of the light of

When an error has arisen from any trans-position of figures the difference between such transposed numbers is universally a multiple of the 9. For instance, suppose an error occurs in bringing out a trial balany rate, if such mistake takes place by reason of transposition the sum in question will always divide by 9 without remainder. To illustrate this: If 97 has been put down as 79, the error will be 18, or twice 9 exactive; if 322 be set down as 223, the error will be 99, or 11 times 9. This oddity goes on indefinitely between any set of transposed figures.—Philadelphia Press.

Who Was She?

Who was one?

She sat beside me in the car,
Young, fair—and yet so bold!
Looking me in the face, she smiled,
Which pleased me, though I'm old.
"Bold from exceeding innocence,"
Thought I, "There is no wrong:
Her admiration of me makes
Her confidence most strong."

When I responded to her smile She'seemed as if she knew me, At any rate she slowly hitched A little nearer to me. She then (more coyish) laid her head So gently on my shoulder, Somehow my arms were quite inclined To reach out and enfold her.

Softly she placed her hand in mine,
My confidence to gain;
But soon I felt her other hand
Was tampering with my chain!
I (quite beguiled) allowed her still
With me and mine to tamper,
Until a lady near her said:
"Baby, that isn't grampa!"

Total assets aggregate $2,407,105, or 10 per cent: more than in the like quarter last year, showing a relatively greater degree of solvency this year.

There were five fewer failures in the Province of Ontario this year, but the liabilities there are 19 per cent. larger than a year ago. In the Province of Quebec there are 15 fewer failures, with only about 10 per cent. of the liabilities reported last year. Nova Scotia also returns fewer failures, with a marked reduction of liabilities, while Manitoba reports only one failure more than last year with a slight
