Barrett Gray's Bank.

"Now, Barrett, my son," said Mr. Gray to his little boy one Saturday afternoon, as he placed a new three-ponny piece in his hand, "by this time you ought to know, I think, the two characters in the world for whom I have most pity; I do not like to say for whom I have most contempt, although I must confess, a little of that enters into my feelings respecting them."

"I ought to know, father," replied Barrett, with a smile; and, indeed, he could scarcely have forgotten, seeing that it was an invariable rule with Mr. Gray never to give his son even a penny without "laying down the law," as he called it; and he had done so in the present instance.

The United Presbyterian Church on Disestablishment. The United Presbyterian Synod, at its meeting in Edinburgh last week, uttered its voice on the Disestablishment question. That voice was as firm and decided as any opponent of the alliance between Church and State could have expected.

superficial extent of this American revival. If, however, an analysis is attempted of the psychological effects produced on the heads and hearts of the so-called converts, we shall probably find reason to lament that so poor a substitute for what pious and reasonable men of all creeds agree in calling the religious life has been so largely accepted.

The Roman Propaganda. The recent action of the Italian Government in taking possession of the country residence of the College of the Propaganda makes the history of that institution a subject of current interest. According to the Tablet of this city, which is certainly good authority for the Roman view of the case, the Congregation of the Propagation of the Faith (Congregatio de Propaganda Fide) is the first organized Board of Foreign Missions ever established.

Going into town one morning, I saw a little girl, neatly dressed, whose face I fancied I had seen before, but could not by any effort of memory call her by name; so I passed her without speaking.

The "Pall Mall Gazette," and Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Several of the metropolitan newspapers have already begun to notice the approaching visit of the American evangelists to London. The Pall Mall Gazette especially so, and under the heading of "The Coming Revival" devotes nearly a column to the subject.

The Boys Heard From.

We see many hard things said about masculine juvenescence. Now we think that there is nothing in all the world so admirable as a rufous boy, unless, perhaps, it be a girl.

Christian at Work.

The undersigned would call special attention to the Presbyterian Quarterly and Princeton Review, of which the January number has just been published. This number will be found to be more than usual interesting.
