

(To be continued)

42 MASS. S. 2422

The log will light the winter hearth,
With many a dream of summer day,
And I will soon forget the song
The little shrew birds sang to-day.

TABLE 1. AF^{2+} -MEDIATED SENS

It will be a sad day for our feline and canine friends that which condemns us to the same dire straits as recently afflicted our guinea-mice. It is a somewhat startling fact that the same time well-authenticated fact, that the cats and dogs of London demand for sustenance a weekly allowance of as much flesh as two hundred and fifty horses yield. Nor is it difficult to account for the enormous consumption. The city, and "twelve miles round," reckons within its limits at least half a million inhabited houses, and it may be fairly estimated that in at least half this number a cat may be found. Thus we have the number of a million of cats. Allow every one of the not over liberal allowance of one ounce of meat per day, and the total amount of meat for her maternal skewed and fast, and it will be found necessary to slice up weekly nearly two hundred and twenty thousand pounds of the flesh, that, before all other, pusses prefer. Then there are the canine species. At the last dog-tax return, it was shown that seventy thousand

[illegible]

Many other examples might be quoted in proof of the newly-awakened passion for the fine arts displayed by modern purveyors of

[illegible]

To obtain, however, the source of 1907 of the horse slaughtered thousands were sold at the dock if the horse required weekly to meet the demands of our cars and docks. The operation, the thousands of horses would be taken to the railroad tracks, the carcasses left there until they live stock in the market. It is not always livestock that he does buy. Every day the work, accident or disease cuts off scores of horses in their prime; and the knacker has peculiarly-built vehicles he sends out to fetch away the defunct carcass from the stable in which the poor beast died. There can be no cavilling as regards price. The dead horse must be sold, and that immediately, and the sum offered for it is all that it will realize. It is not much—from fifteen shillings to five-and-twenty—and considering that the average carcass will

[illegible]

The author himself was a member of the Komsomol. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 1930s, and he was a member of the Komsomol in the 1940s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 1950s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 1960s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 1970s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 1980s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 1990s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 2000s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 2010s. He was a member of the Komsomol in the 2020s.

WASH OF THE ...

The girls are married men; you have the power to see where there will be a marriage tendered, and you can refuse it; and none was. The father of a husband the people ought to awake to such a source of information as they attend every one, that whether he travels or remains at home, he may have his self satisfied, and confer it upon others when necessary, of telling them what he and his neighbors are about; what amount of produce they take from an acre; or what amount they expend there, to an employe in iron, wood, salt, tanning, or any other thing.—Permanent Chronicle.

[illegible]

A Federal game warden, recently to New England from Texas, and on a mission for his hasty exit from that South-western State, he said, "I was attacked with a fever, and my physician began trying on my clothes as soon as he wrote a prescription, and my hired man began to pick up my loose property before he administered the medicine. That cured me of my malarial fever, and of my Texas fever also."

[illegible][illegible]

Mrs. C. L. CHURCH, Minister. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia there is a very great interest in the gospel. The Christian Visitor says that the people are just waking up to all the evangelical denominations, and that the Baptists in particular have many earnest laborers. Where shall they come from? The United States already have a demand for more than the supply. England could help, but Mr. Burroughs's college would especially be served. But then, "Very many of our brethren reside with us on the Canadian question, and others are in the West, all qualified for service." In other words, might bring with them an element of discord. Hence a serious quandary.