

Canada expects to achieve meaningful development, humanitarian, stabilization and diplomatic impact through the approaches set out in the policy. Key priority areas for enhancing Canada's impact and achieving results include:

- promoting the involvement of women and girls as agents of change;
- scaling up the number of women and adolescent girls who can access sexual and reproductive health services, including access to contraception;
- strengthening women's rights organizations and movements;
- expanding the number of girls who complete elementary and high school;
- enhancing women's access to land, labour, and inheritance and property rights, and promoting their economic participation and empowerment;
- better meeting the needs of women in humanitarian settings and reducing incidents of sexual exploitation and abuse;

- increasing the number of women in leadership positions;
- bolstering resilience to climate change and supporting climate-smart agriculture; and
- strengthening peace operations to advance Canada's women, peace and security agenda, including by deploying more women peacekeepers and civilian personnel.

Canada is already making great strides in these areas, and has established a robust accountability framework to measure results. This new framework will also enhance development effectiveness by expanding the information and evidence available to help assess progress and support continued improvements in implementing the policy.

For more information, see the Feminist International Assistance Policy (<http://international.gc.ca/world-monde/assets/pdfs/iap2-eng.pdf>).

