

and the proposed sources of power on the St. Lawrence. Professor Lloyd and his colleague from the University of Montreal are arranging to show some of your Botanists a spot where Canadian flora may be studied, and the Christian Brothers will welcome these visitors to the home of their studies. Dr. Harrison and his staff will introduce those who join them at lunch to the work of Macdonald College, work which is of the very greatest importance to Canada, including, as it does, the study of the whole range of food production as well as agriculture. We hope that those of you who prefer to remain in Montreal on Monday will avail yourselves of the opportunity to visit McGill and the University of Montreal.

We welcome you to our Universities and to our City, for the few hours which you can spend with us our gates are open to you, and we trust that you will carry away with you some pleasant memories of Montreal and McGill.
