

Mr. J. W. Woodward, of 1003 Park Avenue, Omaha, Neb., has issued a book of much value to lumbermen, wood-workers, etc. It is entitled "The Lumberman's Ambidexter," and is so designed as to be a model of convenience. This feature of the book has been patented by the author. The tables are so arranged that by a simple multiple or divisor of two you can find practically the product of any number of pieces of any size of lumber made, barring four foot lengths, which require a division of twelve foot by three; or for inch and a quarter, stock widths, it requires adding one-fourth to one inch totals.

A recent issue of the Northwestern Lumberman says: "Bill" Murray, of St. John, king of log operators of the province of New Brunswick, together with Charles T. White, of East Apple River, N.B., and George E. Bar Hill and John E. Moore, of St. John, N.B., were in town last week, according to the program already announced in this column. They were more than pleased with New York, though not more than New York was with them. It is rarely that any visitors appreciate the metropolis more than they did. It is worth having a metropolis if only to furnish pleasure in the expansive quantities that these gentlemen enjoyed. They report that our lumber is a "corker" and shuts them out of the United States completely, except for lath, and that this commodity can only be supplied to our far east market. To offset this, however, they say their trade with England is in excellent shape.
