THE MARRIAGE OF ANNE

(Copyright, 1920, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

III.—Eyes That Blazed.

It was a dramatic moment. The tall, hates you. Even before you arrived, he said—" I broke off, wondering if it would be exepdient to reveal just what bat in his eye.

And Fred—immaculately-clad in flan
And Fred—immaculately-clad in flan-And Fred—immaculately-clad in hannels—stroiled elegantly toward us.
"Good gracious, Anne! What on earth has happened to you?" Fred's intonation made me feel I looked a fright. I became hatefully conscious of my torn frock and muddy stains. And—yes—my hair was coming down in lanky wisps!

My companion's tones had all edge them.
"He said," I stammered, put about,
"that he 'was going to knock blazes out of the worst rascal in the country."

"Meaning—myself?"

I nodded. I was trembling over the rapidity with which events had marched.
Fred Swung round on me. He was to tower above him. Fred—of average height—is rather slender. He looked almost puny beside this tall, athletic fellow.

"I'm sure I haven't an idea what you're driving at." said he, by this time very white. "Anything you've got to say you'd better say in front of my flancee, here." He caught me by the arm, possessively. And yet the dislocation thought flitted through my mind that Fred was clinging to me for support.

"Your flancee?" The strange young man gave me a queer, unfathomable look. And then his lips twisted into look. And then his lips twisted into rather a crooked smile. "So you're absurd.

No one can spoil it. Not even Julie, who came to me in my cool little cabin after lunch today.

"Cherle, you are in love with young Delaunay." She seated herself on the chaise longue, and swung a dainty silken ankle. "It is necessary that I warn you. He makes love to all the pretty ladies. Don't give your entire heart to him, my little Anne."

I smiled. I could afford to smile. For it was jealousy that had prompted Julie's observations. And Freddie loved me—only me—and no one else.

Her next words were even more absurd.

look. And then his lips twisted into rather a crooked smile. "So you're actually engaged, Delaunay! You! Engaged!"

The hot blood rushed to my cheeks in angry waves. This Saunders fellow was insufferable.

"Take me away, Fred." I spoke imperiously. "I must go home at once and change the frock your—your friend———I emphasized the word with biting sarcasm—"your friend has torn."

sound pleasant.

Again that blue blaze came into the vivid eyes of the stranger. He strode forward toward the speaker, as though Nock him down.
But, really frightened now, I thrust myself between the two.

Over my head they glared at each Mrs. D. G. Wheeler, 37 Becher street,

"You—to use the word, 'decency!"

Then suddenly his uplifted arm dropped to his side, the blue flame died down to a smolder in his eyes, and in a quieter voice he added:

Fred turned and regarded my companion. It was meant to be an insolent stare, I know. But underneath it all, I thought he looked afraid.

"Oh, so it's you, is it. Saunders?" he drawled. "Had a smash-up with your blke, eh? You and Anne look a bit the worse for wear! What's happened?"

In a few agitated words. I explained the situation. The tenseness in the atmosphere frightened me. What in the sandy-haired, hot-tempered giant mean to do to Fred—my Fred?

"I'd be glad of a word with you alone. Delaunay." said the former, frigidly, the moment I ceased speaking, "and I think you can guess the nature of that word!"

Church promptly at 7 o'clock last evening to the strains of the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin. It was the occasion of the narriage of Faith Chisholm, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Turnbull, and Edward Victor Buchanan, 'son of Mr. and Mrs. Gavin Miller Buchanan of Hamilton, Scotiand. Every pew was filled with friends who came to witness the wedding, so wide was the interest attached to it. The centre sections of the church reserved for the eighty or ninety guests present were flanked with huge sheaves of cream gladioli, caught with wide satin ribbon. The altar itself was a bower of beauty. Here palms and ferns were banked together with foliage of pretty autumn tints, while above, the posts of the choir ioft were headed with great bowls of cream gladioli and asters. Streamers of white satin ribbon and trailing vines of autumn leaves linked bowl to bowl in delightful fashion.

The bride, charming in her nuptial robe of white charmeuse, appeared on the arm of her father. A long tunic of charmeuse fell simply from the shoulders over an undergarment of silver cloth. Handsome hand-embroidery in crystal and pearls appeared on the bodice and near the end of the long court train lined with silver cloth which hung from the shoulders. But most beautiful of all was the old veil of handmade lace, sent from Scotland by the groom's mother, and which was crowned with orange blossoms and white heather another gift from overseas. Tiny sprays of white heather again appeared in the shower of ribbons which caught the huge armful of Mary lilies carried by the bride. She also wore a platinum ring set with diamonds, the gift of the groom.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Waterloo street. Here the color scheme was pink and white, carried out with pink and white gladioli. pink rosebuds and white clematis were used effectively on the bride's table, while palms and ferns concealed the alcove where the orchestra was stationed. For going away the bride wore a tailored suit of blue tinsel-tone cloth and smart black hat of silk beaver. After a motor trip through the Adirondacks and a short sojourn on the coast of Maine, Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan will take up their residence at 336 Princess avenue. The gift of the groom to the matron of honor and second attendant were necklaces of pearls, to the soloist, pear earrings, to the best man, a case of pipes, and to the ushers cigarette cases.

This is my first letter to the Mail-Box. I enjoy reading the letters in your column, and see many useful things in the letters. I would like to ask you a few questions. What kind of races do you think would be nice for a school fair? I am a girl of 13 years old, and passed into the senior fourth class and passed into the senior fourth class this year. I will be three months past fourteen when I try entrance. Do you think I am far enough ahead in school? I am inclosing a dime for sick children's hospital. Will you kindly send me the wonderful stocking-foot pattern? Am inclosing self-addressed envelope.
