How do you like her, Jud? Young Doctor Galbraithe looked up at his cousin a second before answering. lived with a faith the woman has not. If she were worth ahundred thousand I would marry her to-morrow. She is a girl who, ten years from now, will do honor even to a Galbraithe door, in the hall, Carmie had come all unheard in her slippered feet, but not my life worth living, even if it might unhearing, and stood silent also. She unhearing, and stood silent also. See that wounded so cruelly at first proved the incentive and watchward to somein this man's words, cruel and heartless in this man's words, cruel and neartiess as they were; but she was proud and thing better than I then dared dream. Years ago I should have considered sensitive and her eyes flashed, and something of the superb power that Judson your offer to me to-night the best of all, Galbraithe prophesied for ten years ed but new I am only sorry that any hence thrilled her as she stood there; then, nothing but a girl, she shivered as she thought how easily she could have been won by this handsome, careless man had she been wealthy-won, but not loved; and she crept silently away, wondering if she could be anything to be proud of-anything but a poor, paid

Thirty, to-day! Once I should have considered myself old at this age, with the best of my life passed, and little before me to enjoy; but now I am very happy, thankful, and content. Carmie Brownell was looking across the blue sea waters, her hands resting upon the railing of the balcony, her calm, sweet face grave and thoughtful. The climbing ivy and rose threw fluttering leaf shadows and sunshine upon her tall, lithe form; and people on the beach below turned to look on the unconsciou figure for a second time.

Who is she. Leicester? Miss Brownell. Is that all there is to say of her? No: I might talk a day or two of her and you would be as little acquainted You are unusally reticent. She must have incurred your lordship's displea sure, and you punish by ignoring her. We are good friends: but I knew that your questions were prompted by idle curiosity, and thought I would wait until you met her. She has won a fair fame and considerable wealth, I believe by untiring patience and labor. She has triumphed over every obstacle, met trouble and disappointment that would have crushed a woman less brave, and now, from it all she brings, instead of a cynical, selfish nature, one so thoroughly pure that men are made better for her living. She is wealthy, famous, but still un

Doctor Galbraithe, at his side, handsome fascinating, worldly-wise, and a trifle worldly-wild, turned again to look at the white-robed figure.

They sauntered back an hour later, just as Miss Brownell tightened the John H. Lawlor & Co. reins over her high stepping blacks. Those are magnificent animals, by Jove! exclaimed Galbraithe.

Yes; she handles them perfectly, too. And Philip's dark eyes flashed, and a wonderful light swept over his face, with the smile and bow he gave Carmie Brownell! while she gave a glance at both, but a smile to only one, as she Monuments. Headstones. dashed by.

And the second time that day the fastidious Judson Galbraithe turned to look at a woman.

He had quite forgotten her, however until, he saw her that evening in a little crowd in the large drawing room Philip Leicester was one of the crowd. and Galbraithe made his way towards

I was only thinking of the starting point. Shall we return? Not unless you wish it, for I have wanted to see you alone, but have not been able to do so. You must know what it is I have to tell, for no man can be with you without learning to ove and respect you. My life is not worthy to offer, but you can make me what you will. Oh, Carmie, I love you. I love you! Will you say that you love me and will be my wife? His face was pale with the great passion that thrilled his soul, his eyes were burning and bright as they searched her face for one tender look, and his hands closed upou hers with a fierce, o'ermastering grasp; but she was looking away from his face, beyond the line of harbor lights and the very sea itself,

And then Leicester's tall form came upon the terrace. He took Carmie's hands upon his arm, and drew her soft shawl around her with a proud air of possession; while Carmie, ever thought ful for this strong man's passion and the sorrow that had settled like dark ness upon him, led Philip down the steps and the moonlight to walk in the glory of perfect love together.
