Chicago Leads in Pennants

Honors in the Windy City Shared by Cpts. Anson and Chance--Boston has Captured Eight Since Organization was Founded in 1876--Teams' Makeups

Since the inauguration of the national league in 1876, 35 championship pennants have been won. Of that number the Chicago club has captured 10; Boston, 8; New York, 3; Baltimore, 3; Providence, 2; and Detroit 1, with no such honors for Philadelphia, St. Louis and Cincinnati. Judging by the success of this year's campaign for the championship Chicago, New York and Pittsburgh have chances to increase their totals, while St. Louis or Philadelphia also may finish on top for the first time in the history of the old circuit.

Two famous managers have contributed to the success of the Windy City in the national league, A. C. Anson and Frank Chance. A. G. Spalding was also manager of the pennant winning Chicago in 1876, when he was the star pitcher of the team. Deacon Jim White caught Spalding's underhand delivery and the infield was called after by Cal McVey on first base. Ross Barnes on second, Anson on third, and Peters at short, the outfielders being Blinn, Paul Hines, Ady and Bleasli. The record of the team that year was 53 victories, 14 defeats and 783 per cent.

Another pennant was captured by the Chicago in 1880 with 67 victories, 17 defeats and 798 per cent. Spalding retired, was the secretary of the club, while Anson was the manager, captain and first baseman. Under Anson had a famous combination, including Larry Corcoran and Fred Goldsmith, pitchers; Silver Flint, catcher; Joe Quest, second base; Ed Williamson, third base; Tommy Burns, short stop, with Abner Dalrymple, George Gore and Mike Kelly in the outfield.

The Chicago team with one additional player also won the pennant in 1881 and 1882. The team's record in 1881 was 66 victories, 28 defeats and 667 per cent, with no chance in the makeup of the previous year except the appearance of Hugh Nicol in the outfield now and then. In 1882 the Chicago won 65 games, lost 29 and had a percentage of 68. Anson had the same great baseball machine, although because of accidents Burns covered second base for a time and Kelly played shortstop.

Chicago's fifth pennant materialized in 1885. Anson allowed his star pitchers, Corcoran and Goldsmith, to get away and substituted the noted stars John Clarkson and Jim McCormick. While Flint caught a majority of the games, Mike Kelly helped out behind the bat, Billy Sunday taking the latter's place in right field. Joe Quest had been supplanted by the clever Fred Pfeffer at second base, but the rest of the team was unchanged. Anson's men won 57 games, lost 25 and recorded a percentage of 70 that season.

Again in 1886 the Windy City celebrated the winning of another championship. Anson had practically all of his old stars. Also Flynn, a pitcher and outfielder, and Jimmy Doyle, who played many games in right field. Ryan was a big hitter and for that reason he had the call over Sunday, who took part in only twenty-five contests. The Chicago's record that year was 90 victories, 34 defeats, and 726 percentage.

Then came a long series of setbacks, until Anson was released in 1895. Tom Loftus succeeded him, but had no better luck, so that when the Boston club's contract with the late Frank O. Selee expired he promptly accepted an offer from Chicago. Selee did not win a pennant, but he built up a first class ball team and secured Chance, Kling, Reulbach, Evers, Tinker, Ludgren, Schulte and others who later put the Windy City on top. Because of ill health Selee was compelled to give up the managerial reins and when Chance took hold of them he developed a championship team in 1906. Reulbach, Brown, Landgren, Pfeister, O'Connell, Kling, Moran, Holman, Evers, Steinfield, Ting...

LUBIN NOW IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. David Lubin, delegate of the United States to the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture, is in Washington for a short stay after his last European tour. The interests of the institute, which included trips to Russia, Germany and France. He is enthusiastic over the work being carried out by the institute, which aims to give all countries scientific information on the world's visible supply of the leading agricultural products.

Gunwald was the manager and he bossed a team of stars. The pitchers were Tom Lovett, Bobby Carrieters and Adonis Terry. Doc Bushong, Tom Daly and Bob Clark wore the mask. The infield was a corker, with Dave Fouts on first, Hub Collins on second, George Plinkney on third and Germany Smith at shortstop, while the outfielders, hard to excel, were Darby O'Brien, Pop Corkhill, Tom Burns and Patsy Donovan. The team won 36 and lost 43.

Brooklyn fans had no chance to enthuse after that until a second pennant floated from the lofty pole in Washington park in 1899. Edward Hanlon had become the manager of the Superbas by that time and he had a winner from the outset. James Hughes, Bill Kennedy, Johnny Dunn and Jimmy M. James did the curving, with Duke Farrell and Deacon McGuire, the receivers. McGann, Jennings and John Anderson played first base with Tom Daly on second, Jimmy Shochard made his debut as an outfielder on that part of the season, the other regulars remaining. The team won 82 games and lost 54.

Providence won pennants in 1879 and 1884. George Wright was the manager and played shortstop in 1879. John Ward pitched 95 games and Bobby Matthews curved the ball in 19. Emil Gross and Lew Bryon caught, while other great players were First Baseman Joe Start, Second baseman McGary and Outfielders Pam York and Paul Hines. The record was 59 games won and 25 lost.

The wonderful pitchers Radbourne and Swenney were instrumental in landing Providence first in 1884, though Radbourne was the real mainstay, pitching in 72 games 40 of them in succession. Barney Gilligan and Vincent Nava, little fellows, were the catchers, while the infielders were Start, Jack Farrell, Jerry Denny and Arthur Irwin. Cliff Carroll, Hines and Radford covered the outfield. The team's manager was Frank Bancroft and the year's record was 34 victories and 28 defeats.

No heavier hitting team ever won a pennant than the Detroit of 1887. W. H. Watkins was manager and Edward Hanlon was captain. Dan Brouters, Fred Dun, Hardie Brown, Edgerly White, Jack Rowe, Larry Twitwell, Hanlon, Sam Thompson, Bennett, Ganzel and Broridy made a formidable combination of hitters and fielders. The pitchers were Lady Baldwin, a star left hander; Charley Getzen and Pete Conway. The Detroit won 79 games and lost 45 that year, their team batting average reached the .347 mark, which has never been surpassed.

McGraw made a catcher out of Bresnan in 1905 and the Giants repeated with the same pitcher. Bowserman caught seventy-two games to Bresnan's eighty-seven and Warner Miller hit .300. The infield was the same, with Sam Strickland at shortstop, Mike Donlin was a star in centre field, flanked by Mertes and Browne. The Giants won 105 and lost 48 that year.

McGraw knew how it felt to win these pennants, for he was a member of the champion Baltimore manager, John O'Donoghue. The Orioles were victorious three years in succession, 1884, 1895 and 1896. The original Baltimore champions had McGraw, Dan Brouthers, Edgerly White, pitchers, with Robinson and Clark catchers. Dan Brouthers covered first base, Henry Reitz played second, McGraw third, Jennings shortstop, stop, Joe Kelly left field, Brodie centre and Willie Keeler right. The team's record was 89 won and 39 lost.

Hanlon let Brouters go in 1895 and Carey played first base. Kid Gleason gave up pitching and played second base when Reitz was disabled. The rest of the team remained intact, the pitchers being Hoffman, Arthur Clarkson, Hemming, Esper and McMahon. The record was 87 won and 43 lost.

Jack Doyle succeeded Carey at first base in 1896 and Jimmy Donnelly played a greater part of the season at third, as McGraw was laid up. Dr. Arlie Pond strengthened the pitching department and the team won 90 games, losing 39.

Pittsburgh didn't boast of a pennant until 1901. Fred Clarke, then as now, was the manager. His pitchers were Leever, Chesbro, Jesse Tannehill and Deacon Phillippe. Charley Zimmer and Jack O'Connor were the backstops. Bransfield, Ritchey and Tommy Leach covered the base, while Hans Wagner and Fred Ely each played fifty games at short field. Wagner also took part in fifty games in left field, the other outfielders being Clarke, Beaumont and Harry Davis. The team's record was ninety victories and forty-five defeats.
