ANSWER—Regret to say it is against the rules. No solution can be changed after it is registered. Suggest that you send an additional renewal and register your correct solution with it.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCORES A SIGNAL TRIUMPH

Epochal Event in City's Musical History—Metropolitan Soprano Pleases.

The triumphal presentation of the London Symphony Orchestra before a well-filled house last night more than proved the truth of the Musical Art Society's advance notices. And as the curtain fell on the Grand Opera House stage, filled with between 80 and 90 players, who, as a body, had achieved something far beyond the ordinary in the realm of music, it was with a thrill of pride that the audience rose to its feet. With few exceptions "London" was stamped on every instrument, and yet their complete efforts, under the direction of A. D. Jordan was something big enough to be hall-marked "Cosmopolitan." The growth of the London Symphony Orchestra is each

CHILDREN ENJOY ORCHESTRA MUSIC

Applaud Enthusiastically the Musical Art Performance in Grand Theatre.

"Music hath charms," it is said, and yesterday afternoon children who packed the Grand Opera House to the very doors, bubbling over with excitement, sat in almost breathless silence during the rendition of an overture to "Oberon," played by the Musical Art Symphony Orchestra. A great deal of adroitness, whispering and giggling was indulged in by the children during the various numbers on the program, but the first note from the huge orchestra sent a wave of quietness over the youthful audience. That the program was appreciated even by such young folk was evident by the rounds of applause which were only quelled by a signal from the baton of the conductor, A. D. Jordan.

At an interval in the program, Mr. Jordan announced that a scholarship would be given for the best essay written by any child on the subject of the performance and handed in by the 25th of February. The scholarship will be worth $25. The various instruments used in the orchestra are to be mentioned in the essay, so that each child might know the sound and the style of the various instruments used, each one was shown in turn, played and explained in an interesting way by Mr. Jordan.

E. W. G. Quantz, musical director in the public schools, said he wished that the entire orchestra had been local, some of the players having been secured from Detroit and other American cities. He hoped, however, that the time would not be far off when London would have its very own symphony.

It is hard to tell which numbers the audience appreciated most. Vera Curtis of the Metropolitan Opera Company, the visiting artist, after singing her special numbers, sang a children's "Hunting Song."

San Francisco, Cal., Feb. 10.—A writ directing Mrs. James B. ARMED BANDITS ROB HAMILTON JEWELER

Hamilton, Feb. 17.—Two armed bandits held up Frank Stretton, a jeweler, in Mr. Stretton's store at noon today, and while one of them pointed a revolver at the jeweler's head the other cleaned out the till. They took $30 in cash, but did not touch any of the stock in the show cases. They had disappeared before an alarm was given.
