

About one mile south of Bon Accord Square, the very heart of the industrial centre, we crossed the now famous Pacific Highway, which cuts through one corner of this city beautiful, and, like a ribbon run through the country, ties Alaska to Mexico.

Few people can at present grasp the significance of this highway to the auto world, but 1914 will undoubtedly awake with wonderful possibilities for this country and such fortunate towns situated as Port Mann is.

As we turned from Grosvenor Road into McBride Drive one of the finest sights in British Columbia flashed into view. From the elevated position of an ideal residential district east, south and west of Lorne Circus, one looks first into the industrial portion of the City of Port Mann. Here God and Man have conspired together to do much for this city with its beautiful parks, boulevards, squares and drives laid out by a landscape artist. Victoria Park, about six acres in extent, running parallel with Wellington Drive; Alexandra Park, about thirty acres
