ANOTHER MAN KILLED ON THE ROYAL BANK BUILDING

VOL. 31.

(Thursday's Sun.)

The second fatality attending the construction of the Royal Bank of Canada building at the corner of King and Canterbury streets, occurred last evening. The victim this time was Melvin Spencer, signalman on the hoist. He received his injuries from a fall at eight o'clock and died in the hospital half an hour later.

Spencer at the time of the accident was on the hoist is used for raising building. This hoist is used for raising building material to the upper stories. Spencer had a loaded wheelbarrow on the platform of the hoist, the material being intended to be used on the third floor. It is supposed that the hoist stopped just short of the required position and Spencer wishing to have the platform raised a little, signalled to the engineer running the hoisting engine. The proper signal for a short lift is a long ring on the signal for a hoisting engine.
