

DO THE LIVING DUTIES

NOR LET THEM BE SIDETRACKED ON ACCOUNT OF SECONDARY ONES.

LET THE DEAD BURY THE DEAD

An Exposition of a Much-Misunderstood Passage of Scripture, With a Beautiful Illustrative Incident in the Life of Christ, Showing His Filial Love When He Was Almost Extremely-Henry Ward Beecher Quoted.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Bailey, of Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 31.—That men and women should ever be alert to heed the call of the highest duty and not to put it aside with frivolous excuses is the theme of the preacher to-day. The text is Matthew viii, 22, "Let the dead bury the dead."

Never make the mistake of treating half truths as if they were whole truths. With his spade the farmer may cut a worm in two, and then each of those two parts will form a whole worm to wriggle off in opposite directions. But truth is not a worm, headless or tailless. In the study of truth we must not consider an individual atom as a complete whole. "Half a fact may be a whole falsehood," once wrote Colton. "Falseness is never so successful as when she baits her hook with truth. No opinions so fatally mislead us as those that are not wholly wrong, as watches so effectively deceive the ear as those that are sometimes right."

What is true in laboratory investigations is also true in reference to Bible study. We must not study the words of my text with a microscope. We must not isolate this sentence from all its connections. We must compare this passage with other passages, this chapter with other chapters, this book with other books. "I cannot understand why Christ should have trampled upon the filial affections of his disciple who wanted to go back and bury his dead father," said a gentleman to me some years ago. "This young man evidently intended to be a devout disciple of Jesus. But surely he had a duty to his home as well as directly to Jesus. There, in the old homestead, lay the corpse of his earthly parent. It was natural for a dutiful son to want to be present at the funeral. Yet when the young man said, 'Let me, I pray thee, first go and bury my father, and I will follow thee,' Christ showed no sympathy with his natural feeling, but practically said: 'Let the neighbors and the strangers come in and, close the eyelids and wash the cold flesh. Let the neighbors sing the death chant and dig the grave. Let strange hands wrap the motionless corpse in its white shroud and carry it to its last resting place. You must come with me at once. Shut your eyes to the past. Let the dead bury the dead.'"

That way of regarding the incident utterly misrepresents it. Never suppose for a moment that Christ demands that any man should show his reverence for him by slighting or neglecting or deserting an earthly parent. Why the last human being for whom Christ provided when he was dying upon the cross was his mother. He turned and looked toward the gentle John, the beloved disciple, sobbing at his feet, and said to him: "John, look after my old mother. Now that she is friendless and alone she will need your love and sustenance." Then he looked at the agonized face of his mother as he said, "Mother, let John take my place and be a loving son to you." These are Christ's exact words: "Woman, behold thy son!" "Son, behold thy mother!" Those were not the words of one who disregarded filial duty. His body was racked at that moment by excruciating agony, his thoughts were not of himself or of her who, by his death, would be left dependent. It was she for whom he was concerned even in the hour of his dissolution. His own conduct in that crisis proves that when he spoke to the young volunteer the words of my text he was not insensible to the claims of natural affection.

In the words of Henry Ward Beecher, Christ was enunciating the great truth that the primal duties of life should not be sidetracked or pushed to the rear on account of the secondary or the more unimportant duties. "It is not that you desire to avoid right things, but you say, 'Suffer me first to do the inferior, then I shall be ready for the superior.' Suffer me first to take care of myself. Suffer me first to take care of my household. Suffer me first to look after this enterprise, and then—No! This constant habit of humbling the higher and making it subordinate to the lower, this constant preference of the inferior to the superior works demoralization. A man does not need to throw away his Bible nor defy his God nor sell his soul voluntarily. He only needs to say, 'Suffer me first to do the lesser thing!' The moment that is done there will be another 'Suffer me first' in its place. And so we shall put the inferior duties in the place of the higher duties and go through life and fall at last." This comprehensive view of my text is, I am convinced, its true interpretation. These words of Christ need to be remembered in other situations than beside the bier of a dead parent. They have a warning lesson for any man who is postponing his duties to the Lord until he has fulfilled his obligations to the world or to society—to any one who fails in his higher duties through selfishness or sloth.

Sidetracked obligations to God! We see them everywhere. We see them first in the excuses which the young man makes when he is fitting himself by education to enter the battle of life. I enter the theological seminary, where thirty or forty young men are gathered into a class room. They are bright, intelligent young men, eager for knowledge, intent on getting thorough equipment for the work they have undertaken. I put to each student this question: "Young man, where do you go to church? In what Sunday school are you teaching? What mission work are you doing for Christ?" Some there will be two, in order to pay their way through college, are performing some duties by which they earn a little money. But the others, in nine cases out of ten, will answer, "Oh, I am not attending any particular church here. I am not teaching in any Sunday school. I am now studying to be a minister, and therefore each Sunday I go to hear a different minister in the town." The result is that nine-tenths of our young theological students, and I think I am not overrating the proportion, do practically nothing for Christ while they are living within seminary walls unless they are paid for their services. What is the result? With a critical, censorious spirit they go from church to church. They pick flaws in this minister, they find fault with that minister, and all the things they belong to the great army of religious tramps, whom I call the "go-rounders." During these years of study their own life is ebbing away. By the time the young man who pursues this course graduates from a theological seminary he is on the verge of spiritual bankruptcy. Why? Mainly because in the three long years of mental preparation for the ministry he has neglected to do personal work for Jesus Christ.

A large number of students in medical schools are the sons of ministers. And, furthermore, I do not believe I am going beyond my right when I say eight-tenths of all medical students came from Christian homes. Yet medical students as a class are noted for their neglect of spiritual work. Thousands of Christian physicians are found all over the land. But while in college most medical students do nothing for the service of their Master. They say, "Wait, Lord, until I pass my examinations." The result of this waiting is that many young men entirely lose their hold upon Christ. Oh, young man, young woman, Christ ought not to have to wait for you to get a mental education before you are ready to serve him. The development of the spiritual life in the heart should go on simultaneously with the mental development.

But these words of my text not only apply to the young people who are sidetracking their gospel duties to make way for their preparations for a profession. They also apply to the busy men and women who, in the prime of physical strength and mental power, are like tired peasants staggering along the highways under greater burdens than it seems possible for them to bear. When I speak thus I mean that this text is applicable to nearly all men and women in midlife. Why? Because I believe that most people are overworked. They are physically tired. Most people are overworked in the struggle of life. Yet this text, O man, O woman, in the prime of your physical and mental strength, apply to you. You right have you to sidetrack your duties to God. No right have you to say to Christ, "Lord, suffer me to do this or that, and then I will follow thee." Christ should be first, not last. Christ's command, no matter how or when it comes, should be heeded or obeyed; then all other duties will fall into line in their right places.

Christ's command, "Follow me," comes to the tired merchant, the worn out merchant. It comes to you even in the whirl and the bustle of business life. "Oh, no," you say, "I have no time for Christ. My business absorbs every atom of my energy. I am so tired from my week day tasks that I am too weary to go to Church on Sunday. Why, when I go, I fall asleep during the sermon. It makes but little difference to me then who preaches the sermon. Come down to my store any time and you will see how I am overdriven. There is a steady stream of men my outer office all the time. I must see them. It is work, work, work until I am nearly dead." Yes, my brother, in one sense what you say is true. You are an overworked man, but how much of that labor that so fatigues you is voluntarily undertaken? Have you, as a Christian man, the right to give to your own concerns your business and the world the whole of your time and energy? Have you forgotten the claims that God has upon you? Better leave undone some of the work you are now doing that you may have strength to serve him. Why should you not be willing to drop some of the duties of your business? You know that much of that grinding, useless, selfish toil is making a failure out of your life? The temporal necessities of life are very small, yet thousands of people plod on, and on, and on, in a treadmill of mercantile drudgery, as though their very happiness depended upon raising their store from a four-story to a ten-story dry goods emporium.

What I have said to the busy, tired merchant I would also say to the busy, tired mother, with a large brood of little ones. I would speak the same words of advice to the anxious, weary, half-sick professional man, the lawyer, the doctor, the teacher, the minister himself. I would also speak the same words of warning to the mechanic, the clerk, the commercial traveler and the servant in the kitchen. You say, "I have no time to serve Christ." You know that the reason you have no time is that you devote to worldly concerns that portion of your time which properly belongs to Christ. Busy? Aye, you are busy. But if you want any work to do you must always go to a busy man or woman to get them to do it. The lazy, loafish individual never has time. The reason you are not willing to serve Christ is because you are placing to the fore your tasks which you need not do unless you wanted to do them. "Follow me," says Christ to the busy man and woman of the world. "Follow me, and follow me now."

But this text has still another application. It is a word of reproof to people who waste their time and strength in useless remorse over their unfulfilled duties to God. They are now dead. Many men and women have sidetracked their direct duties to God by switching them off to a family plot. Useless regrets for the dead may have a great part in the sidetracking of our duties to God. Who was this young disciple to whom Christ spoke? do not know. The Bible does not mention his name. But perhaps he belonged to that great multitude who spend one half of their lives in abusing and neglecting the living and the other half in mourning and sobbing over the dead. Their love and grief are purely Carlylean. They say that Thomas Carlyle, the distinguished fault-finding, iconoclastic philosopher, was the founder of a big school of copyists. However that may be, I know there are many people who emulate the writer of "Sartor Resartus" in one fact. After the death of his wife his habitual lament was, "Alas, alas, she can never know how I loved her! During her lifetime he had for her only sharp words and none of the little delicate attentions which would have made her happy. After she was dead he was embittered by his consciousness of his negligence and added to his fault vituperation of the people around him. Better for him and them had the sorrow for past failure toward his wife led him to kindness toward his living friends. Perhaps this young man of my text was one who had ill-used his father while he was alive, and now that he was dead he wanted to give him a big funeral. Do you wonder, if this was so, that Christ said, "Let the dead bury the dead?"

Perhaps this young man was one of those poor, deluded sufferers who wanted to hug his grief as a luxury. Some people are never happy unless they are miserable. Their smile is a tear. Their laugh is a sob. They never enjoy themselves unless they are mourning over a corpse twenty years old. Christ, in the words of my text, is not telling that young man to be disrespectful to his dead sire. He is, however, enunciating the tremendous fact that a young man does not honor a dead parent so much by weeping over a grave as by living the true, honest, noble Christian life which that dead father would have him live. "Let the dead bury the dead" might be translated into the words, "Let the dead live in the living, and let the living fulfill the mission of the dead."

But I think there is another reason why Christ spoke the words of my text. Jesus is here not only enunciating the fact that the primal duties of life should never be made subservient to the secondary, but also the great truth that a man has his duty to the world at large as well as to his father and mother, his wife and child, his brother and sister and friend. Because men and women are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh that is no reason why we have not a duty to our fellow men who are not akin to us by blood—duty to our fellow men and to our fellow men's children whom you have never seen. A man never learns this lesson more easily than when he is a soldier. I remember some years ago, during the Spanish-American war, we were encamped in the old fair grounds of Springfield, the Illinois capital. Dewey's guns at Manila had spoken. The troops were being hurried to the front. Our regiment was to move south within a couple of days. The surgeon of our regiment came to my quarters one night and said, "Chaplain, read that." It was a letter from Chicago telling him that his wife was hovering between life and death as the result of a very serious operation, and she wanted to see him just for a few hours before he went south. "Why don't you run up to Chicago to-night, and come back to-morrow?" we asked. "You will be here in plenty of time." The colonel won't let me. The orders have come down that no leaves of absence can be granted, as we may go to the front any moment. "Orders be damned!" said I impulsively. "If my wife were dying, orders or no orders, I would go to her." "Then you would be captured as a deserter and perhaps shot," said my companion quietly. "For the good of the service I must obey orders and go with my regiment. My duty to my country is now even greater than my duty to my dying wife." "Yes, sir," said I, "you are right. There are duties in life even greater than those we bear to our loved ones, dear though they may be. God help you in this your hour of trial."

So Christ in these words of my text was enunciating an infinite and omnipotent truth. Jesus is practically saying, "Young man, higher than our love for father or mother or wife or child is your duty to me and to the great world at large. Come with me and help save the millions who are dying in their sins. Come with me and bring back to a life of purity and love those who will never know me unless they see me at the result of thy guidance. Come with me. Come with me." This sentence, "Follow me, and let the dead bury the dead," is only another wording of the same thought which Christ spoke unto his disciples: "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me, and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." Yes, there come certain times in life when our duty to Christ and our fellow men should have precedence over our desires to be with our dear ones in our own homes.

But, though these words of my text may seem to separate some of us for a little while from our loved ones on earth, it is not a sweet and treasured thought that Christ will never separate us, his children, from each other in that better land. According to Christ's great laws, we may believe that the separations of earth are only for a little while and that these earthly separations ultimately mean the reunion in heaven if we only trust Christ and accept Christ for our Saviour.

BABY'S DANGER

The summer months are a bad time for babies, and an anxious time for mothers. Fermentation and decomposition in the stomach and bowels are the cause of the many summer complaints of babies and young children. This is the reason why the hot weather months are more fatal to little ones than any other season. Baby's Own Tablets should always be found in every home where there are young children and their prompt use during hot weather may save a precious little life. The tablets cure constipation, diarrhoea, and stomach troubles, and are guaranteed to contain no opiate or harmful drug. Mrs. Walter Rollins, Seasons Ridge, N. S., says: "Before using Baby's Own Tablets my little one cried almost continuously with stomach troubles. I can truthfully say I never had any medicine act so promptly and give such satisfaction as the tablets do. I do not think you make any claim for them which their use will not substantiate. The tablets can be had from any medicine dealer or by mail from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Price 25 cents a box.

REST.

I love to think of boyhood days
The farmhouse nestling low,
The wood I chopped, the chores I did
In days of long ago.
'Twas then I labored in the sun
To reap the golden wheat;
'Twas then I drove the cattle home
Through twilight dusk and sweet.
I see again the upturned earth,
The furrows of the plow—
I love to think and thank my stars
I needn't do it now.

When he wakes up with headache and a bad taste in the mouth. Something is needed to settle the stomach, clear away the dull, heavy feeling and create a little appetite. Just get a tumbler of water, some sugar, and pour in a stiff dose of Nervine. You'll pick up immediately and feel tip-top in a few minutes. Nervine hasn't an equal for a condition of this kind. It stimulates, cures the headache, relieves the sick feeling and fits you for a hard day's work. Try Nervine. Large bottles cost 25c.

Take it altogether, some medicine isn't so bad, after all.
Some good people are spoiled for want of good works.
