Conservation, A Moral Issue.

The conservation issue is a moral issue. When a few men set possessors of one of the necessities of life, either through ownership of a natural resource, or through unfair business methods, and use that control to exact undue profits, as in the recent cases of the Sugar Trust and beet growers, they injure the average man who must buy the sugar and they are guilty of a moral wrong. It does not matter whether the undue profit comes through stalling competition, by rebates, or other crooked devices, through corruption of business officials, or through selling and monopolizing resources which belong to the people. The result is always the same—a toll levied on the cost of living through special privileges.

Active Service Flags.

The Active Service Flags have been designed to honor the absence of our men and women on military duty. They should be displayed in a conspicuous place, in the home from which the person has gone. The flag is of red and white hunting, and on the centre field of white is placed the number of male leaves corresponding to the number of persons on service from that home. Blue leaves represent those who are on Active Service, and gold leaves are for those who have made the supreme sacrifice.

Those families who have members on service or returned are proud to display their Service Flags.

The Service Flags may be obtained from the Civil Service Bureau for seventy-five cents, and are of the regulation size and pattern. Societies, Lodges and Churches desiring Service Flags communicate with the above Society for prices.

Surely the British Premier will suit you if you want the whole alphabet before you, both capitals and small letters and no extra work at the key. This type is much preferred by those doing their own Typewriting.

"The Ghost At Chateau Du Mont"

Gen. Louis Archibald, in Philadelphia Ledger.

In an area of the British Front honored by the presence of our division in the earlier stages of the war, on the one prominent feature of the landscape, and in close proximity to the firing line, was situated a handsome old French chateau, which for the sake of convenience may be called "Chateau Du Mont". The censor, in this instance, deems it advisable to withhold the name by which it was known on French ordnance maps, just to be on the safe side.

For months the worthies of Chateau Du Mont had been weathering the rigors of the battle, when one day for tactical reasons it was considered necessary to erase it from the landscape. The removal of this fine old pile was by no means decided upon rashly, nor in haste. Every conceivable plan had been considered where-by it might be left to grace its beautiful grounds, but to no avail. The only action which could correct a very grave evil was to level the structure to the ground, thereby removing from the German snipers a highly valuable aiming mark, as, on account of its nearness to the front line, and prominent situation, the German gunners could get "direct alphas" or hit and by carefully observing their "barrage," then switch onto adjacent targets with unerring precision in "aiming" and "range." Chateau Du Mont must be razed, and our instructions with regard to the matter were designed to accomplish this desirable result, and in due time it was done.

The demolition was to take place at two P. M. on a certain night, and about dark of the same night I proceeded to the chateau in company with my Section Sergeant and about a dozen Sappers. The "blowing up" was to be done with gun-cotton, and the several hundred pounds of this commodity with accessories were moved to the scene in a "G. S." (general service) wagon drawn by two mules of highly uncertain temperament.

After a careful examination of the rather spacious and elegant structure, we decided where best to place the "charges" to achieve the greatest results. By midnight each of the twenty odd packages of destruction had been prepared, laid and connected, so that all that remained to do was more gazing wound to an already horribly mutilated country de, was difficult to say whether Hayes or one of his impediments reached the bottom of the stair first, but they arrived in time to interfere seriously with a heavily laden procession emanating from the drawing room headed by my Sergeant bearing a large plate glass mirror in a beautiful golden frame. Snapping on long enough to collect his own legs from the heap of confusion, and get slightly singed by the sulphurous atmosphere surrounding the pile, Hayes kept bright on his endeavors to get away from the vicinity of that region of proaching phantoms. For the sake of his honor and his country, he was willing to face Germans, and thousands of them, together with every kind of high fulness they could invent; but a weird looking ghost in a deserted French chateau was a different matter—a very different matter, in fact.

Letting himself out onto the balcony, Higgins next proceeded, and still in his ghostly raiment, to crawl down the vines of the fern porch to the main entrance, where a grand effect might be expected to follow his peculiar entrance into the front hall. Tied to a tree in the lawn were the two mules, and by the light of a distant star shell they were flooded with the pale moonlight.

One look at the horrible apparition, they took and then they weighed anchor and went away where—as long as they were getting a space between

Every Farmer Needs a Ford

THE Motor Car is a greater convenience to the average farmer than the telephone, the rural mail or even the grain binder.

The binder which is considered as a very useful implement is rarely used more than a few days during the entire year. The rest of the time it stands idle, taking up space, while the automobile is available for use throughout all seasons, and both day and night.

It is ever ready to run down the lane to the back field or the pasture with a parcel or a message, or take you and your family to town for shopping purposes—or on an errand to the neighbors.

The motor car is called upon whenever anything is wanted in a hurry. It is the most useful implement or convenience for the farm. It helps you conserve your energies and time for productive work and enables you and your family to accomplish more with less energy. You surely feel the need of a Ford. Why not order one today?

All prices subject to over-see charges, except trucks and chassis.
