A TANGLED SKELIN.

"It is a matter so entirely for your own consideration, my lord," he wrote, "that I really cannot advise. Mr. Peters, I imagine, intends to leave England again soon; there are painful circumstances which make it undesirable he should remain in this country unless he were to take steps which would cause much suffering to many other people.

With regard to his qualifications, you say you have provided them. I can only add, that if you do induce him to stay, Merriem Royal will never have had a better steward; but, as I said before, it is a matter in which I cannot advise you at all."

"What a mysterious mood Metcalf seems to be in!" was Lord Merriem's comment on the letter, as he handed it to his wife to read. "I shall certainly see if Peters will stay. The arrangement will suit me very well, and I have to see him today, so can do it without making a set business of it."

On his way to the farm he met Forbes, who greeted him with such a queer hurry in his manner that he stopped to ask if he were ill.

"Nae just ill, my lord," was the answer. "A wee thought upset, maybe."

"You look it. What has upset you? Have Mrs. Bruce's bantams been in your garden again?"

Mrs. Bruce kept a pair of pet fowls in a special corner of her own, and their periodical escapes and raids upon Mr. Forbes' flowers were a standing joke through all the household.

"It's nae that, my lord," he said. "Mistress Bruce kens fine that the next time they'll conditioned brutes hers rin in among her lordship's flowers she'll see nae mair o' them. I'm gairn' tae wring their necks, and she kens it, see she's careful. Nae, it's nae the fowls that's troubling me."

"Then what is it?"

"It was Mr. Peters. He met wi' an accident, and broke his spectacles."

"And you have been going into this over that? Your sympathy must be very strong."

"Lord Merriem had quite made up his mind now what ailed Mr. Forbes, and spoke to him sternly enough."

"I am afraid it is not the sight of Mr. Peters' sufferings that has upset you, Forbes," he said, "although it is so early in the day. Are you aware what you called me just now?"

"I beg your pardon, my lord, I'm sure. I'm nae drunk, though you may think it. The word slipped out unawares. I have nae spoken the name for many a long year—nae sin' you were a laddie here wi' your brither beside you. I have been dreaming o' him—nae the least."

"Perhaps so. Whatever it is you had better go home."

"I dreamed that he had come back again," said the gardener, unheeding the injunction. "Does your lordship think that, maybe, he is nae dead after all?"

"I think you would be better at home, Forbes, than exposing yourself in this manner, and talking a farrago of nonsense," Lord Merriem said, angrily.

"Put a curb on your tongue for the future, if you please, and keep your dreams to yourself. I will talk to you another time when you are sober."

"I'm nae drunk, my lord. I have nae tasted a drop the day. Ye'll ken a' by-and-by."

But his master only shook his head, and rode away in the direction of the farm, leaving Forbes looking after him regretfully.

"Weel, awed, I can forgie him," he muttered. "He doesnae ken. How should he? Lord preserve us a', what will be the next, I wonder?"

Lord Merriem was very angry and annoyed with Forbes, who never drank anything stronger than water, being a most abstemious and saving man, though he had no children or relations to take his boards after him. He fancied that they must have been treating him at the farm, and he put the question to Mrs. Talmage, who came out, courtesying respectfully when she saw him.

But she had scarcely seen Mr. Forbes, she said. She had only caught a glimpse of him as he went, and the gentleman had had no glasses while he had stayed.

Whatever he had had to drink had not been there, Mr. Peters and the accountant confirmed her statement. They had both caught his manner a little odd, and that he had seemed curiously upset by the accident to the he slept badly and walked about his room a good deal when decent people were supposed to be asleep.

She felt, with true womanly instinct, that her lodger was a man weary and sad at heart, and she did her good-natured best to make him comfortable.

The sympathized with him sincerely over the pain he complained of in his eyes, and recommended all sorts of notions used by her husband in his recent attack of weak sight.

Mr. Peters thanked her, but declined anything beyond a jug of hot water, and a cup of tea. He would be quite well, he told her, after the night's darkness and rest.

She did not feel quite so satisfied when night came, and instead of being in bed and asleep, her guest was pacing his room, and talking wildly to himself. Now and then wringing his hands and moaning.

Whatever Mr. Peters' trouble might be, the oppression of it burst its bonds when he was alone, and the iron self-control which he exercised over himself went to the winds. His voice seemed choked with sobs as he walked and talked, and Mrs. Talmage listened in fear and trembling to his wild words.

"The poor dear's gone raving mad," she said to herself. "The trouble's in his head, and not in his eyes. Lord help us! what shall we do? What does he mean?"

She might well wonder. Mr. Peters was like some one demented.

A Proper Treatment for Catarrh.

reaches every affected part. Such a remedy is Catarrhose, which is introduced into the portions of the throat, lungs and nasal passages, where it kills the germs and cures the disease. Catarrhose is pleasant, safe, and absolutely sure to cure. It relieves the distressed feeling in the head, clears the throat and nostrils in one breath. Positive proof of cure is found in the words of Mr. Kirk of Kingston, Ont., who says: "I suffered for fifteen years from Catarrh of the nose and throat, and hundreds of remedies, consulted specialists, but was not permanently benefited. Having personally witnessed a cure of thirty years' standing, effected by Catarrhose, I bought an outfit and used it for a month. It cured me, and I am now no more liable to Catarrh than if I never had it." This is most convincing testimony from one of Kingston's best known and most highly respected business men. It proves beyond question that Catarrhose absolutely cures Catarrh. It never fails; never harms; guaranteed to cure. Price, $1.00; small size, 25 cents. ANOTHER DEAD.

Second of Toronto Desperadoes Committed Suicide.

TORONTO, June 7.—Fred Rice and Frank Rutledge, the bank robbers, were taken back to jail after trial. Rutledge, while on the way to dinner, jumped from the top of a car, and fell into the stone pavement 30 feet below and his skull was crushed in. He died two hours later. Rice, the remaining prisoner of the desperate trio, has been manacled hand and foot and will be watched night and day by an extra guard.

Young Children and Malt Breakfast Food.

Do not allow your little ones to use starchy and irritating foods such as oatmeal and the majority of ordinary prepared grain foods. They are hard to digest and lack the grand constituents for the formation of bone and muscle. Malt Breakfast Food is predigested, therefore does not task digestion, and the children love it, and thrive fast on it. Malt Breakfast Food is as cheap as common oatmeal; one packet makes thirty meals. At all Grocers.

Chronic Bronchitis

Mr. Wm. Davidson, St. Andrews, Que., states:—"Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured me of bronchitis. I have, without success, tried many remedies for the past six years. Last winter when I had a severe attack and was unable to work I procured a bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and am happy to state that the third bottle made me a well man."

Mr. W. R. Alger, insurance agent, Halifax, N.S., says:—"I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine for a severe attack of bronchitis. Permit me to testify to its splendid curative properties. I got better from the time of taking the first dose. Having a family of young children, my doctor bills have annually come to a considerable sum. I believe a bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup occasionally will pay for me in reducing them very materially." 25 cents a bottle, all dealers.
