Love Finds the Way

CHAPTER XXII.

Among the many at Rivershall with whom Mr. Clifford stood as a favorite, was an old gardener by the name of Druitt. He had been attached to the house of Melville ever since he had drawn breath, for his mother had been one of cld Lady Melville's domestics at the time of his birth, which event transpired at the same hour as the birth of Sir Ralph.

r Ralph. Sir Ralph always treated old Druitt Sir Relph always treated old Drutt with gracious cordiality, and never thought of disputing his word, or countermanding any order he had given respecting the ornamental parts of the grounds. Sometimes the old baronet's will and the old gardener's clashed, but the former always gave way, usually with a smile and a "Ha, well, Mr. Druitt said so, let it be so, let it be so, please," and so it always was. Miss Lilian sumed and dainty purse.

"And, Jack, as this one is old and likely to be worn out, I—I—you'll let me make you a present of a new one," and slipped a sovereign into his hand.

Before he could get his "thanks" out she had gone.

old Jack Druitt had taken a Now old Jack Druitt had taken a vast fancy to the young tutor in his grim, wooden-headed sort of way, and gone so far out of his usual course—which was to speak well of no man—as to say that, "Master Clifford was a gentleman every inche of him, and a truehearted un."

As such things usually do travel, the story of Mr. Clifford's triumph at the Towers had reached the servant's hall at Rivershall, and from there to Jack's Uvershall, and from there to Jack's ottage in the hollow. He had relished he story—highly spiced, no doubt, beore it reached him—immensely, and was chuckling over it, flyrod in hand by river bank the next morning, when Mr. Clifford came strolling up.

"Good morning," said the tutor, with usual cordiality. "Have you had any sport?"

"An't begun yet," said Jack, gruffly. Can't get this fly on noshow. Getting bind. I be; getting blind."

"Let me see if I can manage it," said Mr. Clifford, and, taking the line out if the old, wrinkled hards, he tied the ly on."

Mr. Chilloru, and of the old, wrinkled hards, he tued of the old, wrinkled hards, he tued fly on."

"There you are," he said; "and now I wish you good fortune."

"Thank ye, thank ye," said Jack—he said "si" to no man, the squire, as he called Sir Ralph, not excepted. "Won't 'ce have a try yoursel'?"

"I don't know how," said the tutor, holding his hands behind him with a smile, and thinking of his book all the while, as Jack thought, while, as Jack thought, "I'll show 'ce," said Jack, and thinking of his book all the while, as Jack thought, "I'll show 'ce," said Jack, and thinking of his book all the while, as Jack thought, "I'll show 'ce," said Jack, and with a speak for overbearing haughtiness.

Mr. Clifford tried with so-so success and tried again. It was not so easy as it looked, but Jack gave him a hint of two, and after a few minutes' practice caught the knack, "Come," said Jack, "I bee a clever in, I've taught the teacher;" and he uckly grimly. "Ah, anyone can do that, Jack," said r. Clifford, smiling. "But this is someing learned; it will be a change from ading. What do you catch?"

"Trout," said Jack, sententiously, "If su can."

now you can, and I hope you will this norning," and with his grave, pleasant od he walked on. Jack looked after him a minute and en went to work

But the work was to be interrupted that morning, for, presently, the sight ne loved best in the world came tripping up, and Miss Melville's sweet voice said, to his elbow:

up, and Miss Melville's sweet voice said, close to his clbow:

"Fishing again, Jack?"

"Yes, Miss Lily," said the old man, turning to her with the light of devoted love in his eyes. "Yes, Miss Lily, poor, ugly, old Jack be a-trying his luck."

She stood behind him on the same spot as the tutor had stood and looked almost as grave.

Jack thought and he said so in his plain and privileged way.

"You be growing almost as serious as Master Clifford, Miss Lily; he be a-spoiling of you, that he be, a fillin' of your sweet head with book nonsense and furrin' palaver."

Miss Lily laughed.

"So you think I am looking grave, do you, Jack? Well, it's nearly time, isn't it?"

"You be a child—a child!" he retorted,
"Talkin' o' time; why, it bean't more than tother day that were a-lookin' at you in the cradle: a sweet, pretty babe you was, Miss Lily as pretty a one as you'd see in----"

"And so that was Mr. Clifford standing here just now, was it?" said Miss Melville, interrupting what usually threatened to be a long description of his dear little missie at three weeks d.

"I didn't say so," said Jack, naively;
but it were him, 'tis true."
"And what was he doing, Jack? Fish-

"And what was he doing, Jack? Fishing?"

"No. trying; and that's a very different thing," and he grinned. "He put on a fly for me; he's allus ready to do anybody a good turn, and I showed him how to handle t' rod."

"Oh," said Miss Melville.
"I" poor chap is getting addled wi' the sight o' book larnin'," continued Jack, wisely. "He'll be an old man before t' crows are up if un don't take care. That's what book larnin' does for everybody. Let him learn to throw, affly, it will be a change for un—take him from them books, maybe."

"Oh," said Miss Melville. "And he is going to learn, is he, Jack?"

Jack shook his head.
"Dunno," he said; "he ain't got a rod, for one thing."

"That's your old rod in your hand, Jack, is it not?" said Miss Melville, by way of reply.

"Yes," said old Jack, and lokoed at her inquiringly. "It ain't the one as I've got at home."

She paused in dismay.
Jack chuckled.

"O' course, o' course, it's Mr. Druitt's compliments, but it's her present none t' less. He! he! Mr. Druitt's compliments! He! he!"

So it came to pass that Miss Melville, walking along the bank next morning, found Mr. Clifford fishing for trout, and stopped with a look of surprise.

"Good morning, Mr. Clifford; bave you found a new amusement!"

"Yes, Miss Melville," he replied, with a little less gravity. "Thanks to one of your gardeners, Mr. Druitt, he taught me to throw a fly yesterday, and last night sent me this rod as a present. I can't think what possessed him, but I am more grateful than I can say," and a slight flush came over his face as he turned his head away."

"Indeed!" she said. "Poor old Jack is very grateful on his part for any little kindness. I expect you have won his heart in some way."

He shook his head.
"No," he said, simply; "I am unconscious of anything of the sort; it is a piece of spontaneous good nature for which he will not let me thank him."
"Jack dislikes thanks, I know." said the beautiful girl, and with a good-morning as grave as the tutor's she walked on. "Yes," said Lilian, hurriedly, render-

Extradition Was Refused in Case of Promoter Mitchell.

New York, July 7 .- The hearing queror."
But she had only very little of the triumphant air of the conqueror, for the next moment her face grew pensive, and sinking into a chair she murmured:
"How he must despise me! He is so grave, so grandly patient. I stung him for the moment, but only as a tiresome wasp stings a lion or a huge Newfoundland. He was stung, though—and—I was stung yesterday."
"I wonder.' 'she resumed, with a sudden flush, "what papa would say if he could know my thoughts. Oh, dear me, I think I'll go and find Kate." he application for the extradition to Canada of William S. Mitchell, the mining promoter, who is wanted in Canada on the charge of securing $5,000 under false pretences from Alexander C. Ross, M. P., was continued to-day. Mitchell's account of the deal did not materially differ from that of the other witnesses. He did not deny that he paid $85,000 for the option which he sold to the syndicate for $130,000 on and $30,000 in the stock of a $2,000,000 holding corporation.

The difference, he maintained, was in his legitimate profit.

Commissioner Alexander discharged Mitchell on his denial and the lack of proof to the contrary that in disposing of the option on the mining property he was not acting as the agent of the Ross syndicate, but only disposing of the property at a legitimate profit.

THEY WERE THE VICTIMS.

THEY WERE THE VICTIMS.
Toronto, July 8.—In a statement issued yesterday, Hon. J. J. Foy said that the members who, according to a despatch from New York, were involved in the charges against the mining promoter Mitchell, were concerned, not as partners, but as victims. Mr. Foy said: "Some people have misinterpreted the despatch from New York in reference to the proceedings for the extradition of William S. Mitchell. It is true that some members of the Senate and House of Commons are said to have been among those who are alleged to have been swindled, bit there is no foundation whatever for any statement that any members of the Senate or Parliament had anything to do with the swindling. On the contrary, they were among the victims."

"That's your old rod in your hand, Jack, is in not!" said Miss Melville, by way of reply.
