Meeting 22,000 Wounded

All About the Wonderful Work of London's Ambulance Column.

Every time a train bringing wounded soldiers into London starts on its way, the telephone bell rings in a big house close by Paddington Station.

The call comes from the Deputy Director of Medical Services at the Horse Guards in Whitehall, and the big house at Paddington is the headquarters of the Ambulance Column of the London District.

The main work—it is voluntary and gratuitous—of the Ambulance Column is to meet all the military hospital-trains in London, and to take charge of their freights of broken humanity. It met the first train which carried wounded soldiers back from the war to London—that was at Waterloo Station, on August 30th, and it has met every train since. Although over 22,000 officers and men have been met and succored so far.

Exactly what happens when a hospital train is on its way to town is this. The Medical Service Department of the Horse Guards rings through to the Ambulance Column. They say where and when the train is due, how many officers and how many men it is bringing, and how many of them are stretcher cases, and how many "sitting" cases.

The message, which may come late at night, generally allows about an hour and a half for all arrangements to be made. And very thorough and admirable these arrangements are.

"Sisters" Warned by Telephone. Nothing that ingenuity and foresight can suggest to ease the lot of the heroes of the trenches on their arrival is overlooked or forgotten. First of all, the stretcher-bearers and "sisters" are warned for duty by telephone. There are 200 of these voluntary helpers, the majority of them women employees of the Prudential Assurance Company, and there have been times when they have had to deal with as many as 2,300 cases a week. This, bearing in mind that about fifty stretcher-bearers are allowed to a train, shows the demands made upon them.

The next thing done is to load an omnibus with blankets, pillow-cases, hot-water bottles, and Thermos flasks (filled with milk), and get it off to the station at which the train arrives. There is an enormous room at the headquarters of the Ambulance Column which is literally piled high with blankets and pillow-cases, and their sorting and folding of them on their return after use is a matter of infinite labour of love.

So is the washing; and but for the splendid self-sacrificing spirit of patriotism which has been shown by a small band of working women the expense of washing would be enormous. But the blankets are taken and washed by laundresses in their own free time, while some of the men employed in the neighbouring houses turn to the headquarters of the Ambulance Column have banded together to take turns in washing the pillow-cases.

Psychology of Obsessions.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

What causes obsessions? How do people get into the state of mind in which their fear of some disaster becomes a mania untrammelled by reason or common sense? Having a natural tendency in the direction of obsessions I have studied their psychology very carefully and have come to the following conclusion.

An obsession consists in getting into the state of mind where you do not stop to reason about the possibility of the thing you dread happening, but jump over that part of the subject entirely and concentrate upon the dire consequences if it should happen. Could the Basket Really Catch Afire? For instance, the woman with an obsession on fire does not stop to reason out as to whether it is really possible for the basket of stockings she removes so carefully from the radiator to catch fire there. She does not consider whether the radiator could ever give off a heat equivalent to the igniting point of the wicker basket. She thinks only of what a terrible thing it would be if the basket should catch fire and the house should catch fire and burn down. She pictures her beloved household belongings vanished forever; she imagines herself and her family burned alive in their beds. It would be a horrible calamity, it is better to take no chances—and so she removes the basket.

How Do I Know What Other People Think? You may wonder how I can know what goes on in another's mind. I don't know. I only reconstruct by analogies. You see, as I before remarked, I have a strong tendency in that direction myself, and the other night when I was on the verge of giving way to it, I stopped and analyzed my feeling. I was in a friend's home, I was the last person to leave the bathroom for the night and as I clambered into bed I found myself wondering if I had turned off the water cock. "It would be terrible if that should overflow," I found myself thinking; "it's right over the living room and water would run that new ceiling." I actually started to climb out of bed and go back to make sure and then I restrained myself. "You know perfectly well you turned it off," I told myself. "And even if you hadn't, of course there is an extra outlet in the bowl. You can't remember it but there always is. You aren't looking at the thing reasonably. You are simply thinking of how terrible it would be if it should happen."

Obsessions Grow By What They Feed On. An obsession is a cancer of the will. It grows by what it feeds on. The time to nip it is in the bud. Have you any dominating fears that other people are inclined to call obsessions? If you have, suppose your subject them to the test I have outlined and if you find you are forgetting to use your reasoning powers, take hold of yourself, make a fresh start, and use them.

Questions and Answers. Question.—Does one congratulate the bride or the groom or both? Reply.—If one wishes to do just the right thing I believe one congratulates the groom and wishes the bride happiness. By the way, if one wishes to be ultra right, one congratulates another only when one is or has been in a similar position. Otherwise one felicitates.

MISREPRESENTATION.

I bought a pound of yellow cheese the other day from Grocer Whee. And as he wrapped it up he cried, "In this fine cheese I take much pride. It's made from Jersey cream and milk and you will find it fine as silk; it's absolutely pure and clean, contains no dyes or gasolene, it's rich and sweet, without a taint, dogme my buttons if it ain't. Oh, it will chase away your woe, and make your hair and whiskers grow." I took it home with eager feet, impatient to sit down and eat, for I am fond of high class cheese, which with my inner works agrees. But that blamed stuff was rank and strong, for it had been on earth too long. My wife, a good and patient soul, remarked, "Bring me a ten-foot pole, before you do your 'other chores, and I will take that cheese out doors. Before it's fit for human grub we'll have to stun it with a club." What does a sawed-off groper gain by such a trick, unsafe, insane? And what does any merchant make by boosting some atrocious fake? Yet every day we're buying junk which proves inferior and punk, although it's praised to beat the band; such things are hard to understand.
