Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

A SURE SIGN OF OLD AGE.

When you get to a place where you find that the presence of children and young people is an annoyance and an irritation to you, look out.

Or perhaps, I had better say "look in."

There is no surer sign of old age of the heart and soul than the state of mind which makes you frown instead of smile at a crowd of youngsters or a group of young girls and boys.

Glad With the Freedom of School Let Out?

Into the trolley on which I was riding the other day crowded a big bunch of youngsters, somewhere, I should say, between five and seven. They were accompanied by a teacher and were evidently on one of those educational excursions which modern schools of education allow. (There are some reasons why one would prefer to be born when one was and where one would have liked to be a child of to-day. Think what we would have thought if we had been allowed to escape from the school-room for a whole morning to visit some historical landmark!)

The youngsters might have been a little too obtrusive if they had not had the teacher's presence to restrain them. As it was they confined themselves to giggles, nudges, low whistles and occasional pleasant calls across the aisles. Several of the boys were at that delightful age when their wide grins exposed fascinating fangs (I love little boys at this stage better than anything in all childhood). It did not seem as if anyone could fail to be cheered up by the contagion of their "glad with the freedom of school let out" mood.

And yet opposite to me sat a woman who scowled at them from the moment they entered until the moment they left the car.

Her Actions Speak Louder Than Her Looks.
 She was a woman of perhaps 45, who was evidently trying to keep her youth by careful grooming, painstaking grooming, and such aids to youth and beauty as marcelling. But she was very plain that she was not keeping her heart young—and if she then lets herself frown like that, she can't keep her face young, either. Of course, there are times when the thoughtlessness of youth does really cause older people legitimate annoyance. For instance, in the inn where I was staying last summer a crowd of college girls who wanted to get up and see the sun rise, spoiled the night's rest of everyone in their neighborhood.

Surely You've Wanted To.

Again, small children when not properly restrained by their parents, will often intrude seriously upon the rights of others. I know of no keener itch than the itch to spank a spoiled child who goes romping and meddling about while his parent smiles blandly at him so long as his acts do not inconvenience her.

But to resent such things is one thing. And to resent the effervescence of youth, its silliness, its lightness of heart, just because you yourself have grown more sensible (?) and no longer giggle over nothing, is quite another thing.

If ever you find yourself doing that, look out—or, as I said before, "look in."

THE BOY AND HIS DOG.
 A boy and his dog make a glorious pair. No better friendship is found anywhere. For they talk and they walk and they run and they play. And they have their secrets for many a day. And that boy has a comrade who thinks and who feels. Who walks down the road with a dog at his heels.

He may go where he will and his dog will be there. May revel in mud and his dog will not care. Faithful he'll stay for the slightest command. And bark with delight at the touch of his hand. Oh, he owns a treasure which nobody steals. Who walks down the road with a dog at his heels.

No other can lure him away from his side. He's proof against riches and station and pride. Fine dress does not charm him and flattery's breath is lost on the dog, for he's faithful to death. He sees the great soul which the body conceals. Oh, it's great to be young with a dog at your heels!

ALWAYS SOMETHING.

If one is bound to have the blues, and grumble like the deuce, then every blooming thing he views will do for an excuse. Where'er he looks he faces wrong and misery and strife; oh, something always comes along to take the joy from life. He has a small attack of flu, and it has knocked him flat; he stands around and says, "Kerchoo!" and stronger words than that. He tells his woes to other cranks, in voice of doleful pitch, and doesn't give a word of thanks that he is spared the itch. The day is dismal, and he brays, and tears his hair and robe, and he forgets the pleasant days when sunshine soaked the globe. He sadly walls the same old song, or plays it on a fife. "There's always something comes along to take the joy from life." And when one views the world like this, he is a hopeless case; he wouldn't know a slice of bliss if pushed against his face. A ton of grief upon this hick is most securely clinched, and he would make some kind of kick if he were being lynched.

Fads and Fashions.

Some of the new wraps suggest the old Roman togas. Duvetyne handbags are both pretty and fashionable. The new sleeves are very small and must be very chic. Raffle embroidery appears on some novelty costumes. Metal ribbons serve as string belts for evening gowns. Some of the prettiest new smocks are made of a rough silk. Green makes a charming lining for brown sports clothes. The lace-trimmed taffeta dress is smart for afternoon wear. Black pilot straw hats have draped crowns of green silk. Polo cloth in the natural tone is highly favored for top coats. The favorite color in serges and tricotines continues to be navy. White fox neckpieces are returning to favor for summer days. Braids, embroidery and laces are used extravagantly as trimming. Checked velours and striped worsteds are used for sports suits. Braided or embroidered vests are used on some of the tailored suits. Many of the new nightgowns have sleeves and upper parts of net.

Should Curates Marry?

WIVES IMPOSSIBLE ON £200 A YEAR, SAYS BISHOP.

"Should curates marry?" was a point raised by the Bishop of Liverpool, at the recent Convocation of York. "The problem of the curate," Dr. Chavasse termed it, and he reiterated his view that "bishops ought to combine to stop at present the marriage of curates."

"Men are coming to me for ordination," he continued, "and I am asking them: 'Are you married or engaged to be married?' Almost invariably I find the answer is 'Engaged to be married.' In that case I am saying to them 'I cannot accept you if you mean to take a wife on your income of £200 a year.'"

"I think we shall have to lay down some such rule as that, or otherwise we shall have a vast number of the young clergy in really serious straits. Of course what happens usually when I decline to take them is that some other bishop takes them (laughter). I think if we could come to some determination not to accept young men contemplating marriage it would be a very good thing for the younger clergy of the Church of England."

Almost a National Scandal.

The Archbishop of York, who presided at the Convocation said if the members of the Church of England desired to have a resident married clergy of educated persons in their midst, they must either, in a degree not hitherto contemplated, raise the money by which they could be maintained, or else be prepared for a very drastic diminution in the number of separate cures throughout the country. It was quite impossible to put into words what the bishops felt about the present position of the bulk of the clergy of the country. It was a position of almost intolerable hardship and injustice, and only the patience and silence of the clergy themselves prevented its being regarded as a national scandal.

The Bishop of Sheffield said so many of the clergy were in financial straits that unless serious measures were taken very rapidly there would be most serious disaster.

The Bishop of Durham—PR boys have £200 a year.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man said no eloquence could adequately describe what was happening to-day in vicarages and rectories. In the Isle of Man things were even more desperate than on the mainland.—Liverpool Weekly Post.

What the Sun Gives Us.

The cost of light per ounce has recently been worked out by Dr. Charles Davidson, of Greenwich Observatory. It takes an appalling amount of light to weigh an ounce, he says, and the cost, as supplied by gas and electric light companies, works out at something like £10,000,000.

The sun showers down on us 160 tons of this valuable stuff every day, says the doctor, yet we often neglect this free gift and prefer to pay £10,000,000 an ounce for very much inferior quality.

If the sun charged us for his magnificent light at the same rate as the gas and electric light companies, we should have to pay £57,344,000,000,000 a day, or about 21,000 million million pounds a year; but the sun does not charge—he gives it to us all without money and without price.
