SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

A GIFT WITHOUT MONEY AND WITHOUT PRICE.

A man I know has a wonderful wife. He doesn't know how wonderful because he never had any other kind. I don't want her to die, and I don't want him to divorce her, but I do wish there were some other way than those two in which he could try some other wife and learn how wonderful this one is.

An Exceptional Wife.

She is a charming mistress of her home, always well dressed and well groomed, the kind of woman a man is proud of at the head of the table, or on the street beside him. She is thoroughly competent as a homemaker and a housekeeper. Her home is charmingly planned and beautifully and also thrifty run. Yet she is not the type of woman who has no interests beyond the domestic. On the contrary she understands a great deal about her husband's profession and can help him with it and listen understandingly when he talks about it. Yet she is not at all the domineering type but defers to him very gracefully. She has her faults like the rest of the world but she is far and away above the average wife, who may have some of these good traits but seldom all of them.

Of course her husband loves and admires her but I don't think he understands how lucky he is because he has never had anything to contrast her with.

Suppose They Told Him Now.

Now here's what struck me the other day. If she should die he would probably get letters from many of her friends saying what a wonderful woman she was, how exceptional. Doubtless he would think, "I didn't appreciate her," and would suffer as we all do at such times. And it wouldn't do her the least good.

But suppose some of these friends should tell him now the things they would write at her death. Not just bluntly, of course, but when the way opened. It generally does, you know, if you are on the watch for it.

There's been a great deal said about the wisdom and kindness of saying nice things about people to them while they are alive and not waiting until after they are dead.

The Best Gift We Would Give.

This is just an extension of that idea. There are so many people who love each other deeply but get in the habit of taking each other's good qualities for granted. A wife doesn't appreciate the joy of her husband's gay disposition because she has never lived with anyone else. A husband doesn't appreciate his wife's wonderful management because he has never lived with anyone but a wonderful manager.

A tribute paid by an outsider now and then might wake this dormant appreciation to an occasional expression of praise and gratitude. And foolish though it be, we are all so hungry for that expression that it would be hard to give a more precious gift than such an awakening would be.

"Little rabbits, have a care," Danny Fox is over there, just beyond the Old Brush Heap, in the thicket, wild and deep."

cawed Professor Jim Crow as Lady Love and her bunny boy hopped up the winding path to Cousin Cottontail's neat little bungalow.

"Oh dear, Oh dear," sighed the pretty lady rabbit, looking anxiously ahead, "we must hurry, and away she hopped faster than ever, her little bunny son by her side, his knapsack bouncing up and down on his back and his red-striped, candy cane swinging from his left paw.

"Faster, faster you must go, Danny Fox on tippy toe. Waits to catch you with a spring. Hurry up like everything!"

shouted the kind old crow.

"Dearest me! I can't hop a mite faster," gasped poor little Lady Love.

"Yes, you can't, Mother dear," cried the little rabbit, pulling his popgun from his coat pocket. The next minute the cruel face of the old fox peered through the thicket. Then out came his shoulders and I guess his long bushy tail would have followed if all of a sudden the cork bullet from the little rabbit's popgun hadn't hit him squarely on the tip of his long nose.

"Ouch, ouch, ouch! Who threw a brick On the end of my nose, or swung a stick?"

snarled Danny Fox, his eyes so filling with tears that he couldn't see anything—absolutely nothing but a million stars more or less.

"Ha, ha! I hit your nose with a cork bullet," shouted the brave little bunny as he and Lady Love hopped under the Big Brush Heap and into Cousin Cottontail's neat little bungalow.

"Dear, Oh dear! Is that dreadful fox about?" asked Cousin Cottontail, scarcely bolting the door after them.

"Indeed he is," panted Lady Love, sinking into an easy chair. "I declare, I wish the good Policeman Dog would look him up for a year and a day in the Rabbitville Jail."

"I'll call up the Police Station this very moment," answered Cousin Cottontail, and the next minute she was shouting over the wire:

"BOB! Please come quick."

Policeman Dog with your hickory stick."

"Where to?" answered a deep, kind voice—the voice of the good Policeman Dog himself. Wasn't that lucky? Well,

"Ha, ha! I hit your nose with a cork bullet."

I guess yes three times and maybe four.

"Cousin Cottontail's Cottage, Old Brush Heap," answered the quick-witted lady bunny. "Danny Fox is just outside. I'll try not to let him in until you arrive. But please be quick and bring along your hickory stick."

"As sure as I have 23 brass buttons on my big blue coat," answered the kind protector of law and order in Rabbitland, and picking up that wonderful club, he hurried off right into the next story.

Christmas Appeal and Winter Relief

FOR THE POOR OF ST. JOHN'S.

As in past years the Salvation Army in conjunction with their "League of Mercy" are anxious to bring some cheer to the deserving poor and needy of the city, particularly at this Christmas time.

With our knowledge of your interest in every effort for the alleviation of real suffering, we take the liberty of forwarding you this letter of appeal and believe that you will, as in former years, come to our assistance.

The Bible story of a humble peasant from Samaria, who one day riding along a dusty road, mounted upon a mule, seeing a man in trouble, gets off, helps him, then resumes his journey. "Love, all along the common roads of life, the dusty highways and lonely byways, here is the daily service of Christ" for all of us.

We shall endeavour for His sake to take the Samaritan's place, and ask for your co-operation in supplying the oil and 2d.

"And if thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay."

We shall endeavour for His sake to envelope and ally for your reply. All gifts and donations will be acknowledged through the press, unless otherwise desired.

Wishing you the compliments of the season.

Yours to serve,

THOMAS CLOUD,
Colonel.

DINGBAT AND I.

Dingbat has a stately auto, and he drives it with a grin; "Make a killing" is his motto—and my bus is made of tin; humble tourists it was made for, men who cannot make display; but the blamed old thing is paid for, and I'm feeling blithe and gay. Dingbat has a gaudy palace, it's the finest in the town, and I view it without malice, though my house is tumble-down; it's a shack you'd hardly trade for, if you're fond of pomp and state, but the poor old wreck is paid for, and I keep my smile on straight. Dingbat's dressed in gorgeous raiment, he is wearing green and pink, while the tailor shrieks for payment—my old duds are on the blink. They're unfit for the swell parade for, quite unfit for fashion's pets, but the fierce old rags are paid for, and I have no vain regrets. People say that soon or later Dingbat's luck will halt and pause, for his outlay's always greater than his income ever was. Dingbat buys and keeps on buying anything that is for sale, and he wastes no time in sighing, that he seldom has the kale. If I can't afford a wagon I will walk—the wiser plan; if I have no jeweled fagon I will drink soup from a can. Saving kopecks, toiling, straining, I'll have rubles good to see, when poor Dingbat is explaining to the bankrupts' referee.
