The opera house was filled with an appreciative audience, and the scene when all who took part, were assembled on the stage, was one of the prettiest ever seen in the opera house. "The Temple of Fame," is a representation of the Goddess of Fame seated on her throne, and inviting all to ome forward, and state to her their claims for the crown which she holds in her hand. One by one, the great ones of the earth, past and present, come before her and state their arguments. This gives great scope for rich and handsome costumes, as well as historical and ludicrous ones. The addresses to the goddess were also very much varied from the scately, dignified words and actions of the Queen to the incorrigible Samantha Allen A glance over the name and characters below will give an idea of the interesting and varied characters presented specials were on collection of black more deserving of mention than the others. wyandottes, and cochin bantam hen and Everyone did well and Mr. A.
