

The Squire's Surprise.

Christmas Eve was always celebrated in the good old fashioned way at White Oak Manor. Squire Sherrodd annually threw open his wide doors and welcomed his neighbors from all around. He was fertile in suggesting toasts that would enable his guests to empty the punch bowl twice or thrice that evening, and he was lavish with his chicken and ducks and fattened shoats that never lived to see a Christmas festival, since their birth dated from the Spring previous. A heifer was always sent from the house to the negro quarters and bushels of apples and sweet potatoes accompanied it. In fact, the Squire acted just like a rich man on that one day of the year, and spent the remaining three hundred and sixty four in bringing his expenses within the limit of his income—assisted in the latter good work by his daughter Anne. In regard to her he was selfish, for he swore up and down that never would he give her up to any young fellow that wanted her, and every one believed his word. Suitors she might have in plenty; but the Squire acted the part of Dragon over his Fairy Princess, and the eligible young man held aloof.

All Topton can remember that Christmas when the cold set ears and cheeks aglow, when a thin sheet of ice formed in the bottoms, and Mistress Anne was just twenty years of age—what a wonderful year that was! I remember it perfectly when every one accused me of bringing a bit of our northern climate with me, and, for the sake of politeness pretended that they enjoyed it.

'That's due to you,' cried the Squire, when the first flurry of snow fell on Christmas Eve; and as the storm increased, the jovial host would look at me and inquire if I felt 'at home.' But the storm, which turned into rain, was forgotten in the preparations for merry making; and when the table had been laid out, and the room decked with holly and mistletoe, and great logs were ablaze in the open fire place, it was nearly time for the guests to arrive. I stood in the hall with the Squire, laughing and joking, when suddenly the old gentleman burst into a roar of hearty laughter. A moment's silence had preceded this outburst, and I was lost in astonishment.

'It's raining,' gasped the Squire, between times; 'and—and—here he went' off again.

I knew it was raining, and said so. 'Yes, yes; but it's the best joke, he spluttered; 'you know Anne—' I did.

'Yes—but that's not it—I must confide in you,' said the enigmatical old gentleman; 'you know—'

I knew nothing, for at that moment the guests began to arrive, and, judging from the laughter outside, they came all at once. I stood by the Squire and was introduced to each one who entered.

'Hello, Cav, my boy!' suddenly shouted the Squire, as I began to wonder how much longer the procession would keep on. 'Come in—glad to see you. How's travel? Pretty muddy, eh? Well, I reckon we'll have to keep you here to night.' The Squire burst into a laugh at this, while the young man whom he welcomed looked rather embarrassed.

'Mr. Wright, my friend, Mr. Cavalier Broadnax. Mr. Wright is from up North, Cav.; so take him in and treat him kindly.' Mr. Broadnax obeyed, looking rather ill at ease, I thought.

'By the way, Cav., Anne's upstairs,' called the Squire after him; 'but she'll be down right away; and again the Squire literally roared with good humor. I am afraid that I was rather absent minded just then, for I was wondering what the Squire was about to tell me when he was interrupted.

Presently Miss Anne came into the room where the young man and I were alone, and, overlooking me altogether, she ran up to the new comer, who seemed on good terms with everybody in the house.

'Is it all right?' she said. 'Are you sure?'

Broadnax nodded vigorously, and, looking at me, whispered something in her ear at which she grew red and shook her head. Mistress Anne ran to the door, and turned to throw a kiss in return to him, when she saw me for the first time, and with a cry of surprise slipped suddenly away. Mr. Broadnax might have supposed that such scenes were every day occurrences with me by the careless way in which I referred to the weather when he turned.

'Yes, he said, absent'y; 'it is bad damn this storm!' he added, suddenly, and with emphasis.

'That's what I say,' laughed the squire, entering at that moment; 'but you must make the best of it, and stay here to-night. Eh—excuse me,' and the Squire shot out again. Very curious his actions were that evening, and I wondered if Broadnax had noticed them; but, as I looked in his direction, he seemed to be lost in thought.

'Eh,' he said, quite sharply, causing me to start: 'I—eh—you.' There was something mysterious in the air, and I concluded that the haunted room, where they placed guests when the house was full, worried the young man.

'You do not know,' he began again, when the Squire's voice was heard calling him, and, seemingly glad of a chance, the young man escaped. I was at my wits' end when Mistress Anne entered and looked surprised to see me alone. She looked pale and worried, and I knew at once something was wrong.

'Can I not help you?' I asked, going toward her. She started as though I had offered a pistol at her head, and was so much taken aback that I in return grew nervous, and we must have made a pretty picture as the Squire looked in and yelled 'Dinner!' at which we both jumped. I gave my arm to the girl, and she trembled violently as we went down the hall, so that I blamed myself for not minding my own business. It was a very jolly meal—everybody was in high spirits except Mr. Broadnax and my fair partner; and I fancied the Squire laughed rather nervously.

'How are the roads, Colonel?' asked the Squire, between one of the courses. I never saw such an interest displayed in anything before as Squire Sherrodd evinced in regard to the condition of the roads.

'Bad, sir, bad,' answered the Colonel, from the other end of the tables. 'Mud clear up to the axles—holes deep enough to bury a man, sir. Mules got stuck three times coming here.'

The Colonel applied himself vigorously to his dinner again, but his host leaned back in his chair and laughed loud and long. Then he proposed a toast to the roads, and, as it was only an excuse to drink, everybody responded.

When the plum pudding came on, the darky servant whispered something to his master, which set him laughing again.

'Ha, ha!' he cried. 'Would you believe it! Beaver Dam's broken loose, and Big Muddy's risen so high that the bridge is gone—ha, ha, ha!'

It seemed rather a serious thing to laugh at, but as everybody laughed with the Squire—except Mr. Broadnax—I followed suit.

'Eh, Cav,' queried the Squire, laughing heartily once more; and from that time he laughed continually, toasting the furious elements in all their guises. At the time I thought it was the punch, but later on I concluded that the condition of the roads caused his merriment.

When the ladies left us, the Squire, rose to his feet. 'My friends,' he said, gravely, 'I have a double toast to offer—a surprise to you all. I propose the health of Mr. and Mrs. Cavalier Broadnax, my much beloved daughter and that boy over yander. By the way, Cav., you have the license for Mr. Pierce will perform the ceremony in the large hall. Gentlemen, Mr. and Mrs. Cavalier Broadnax!'

We all joined in a shout that must have startled the ladies, and began showering congratulations upon Broadnax, who looked as much astonished as we were.

'Eh, Cav,' laughed the Squire, 'hadn't you better find the bride? Do you know, gentlemen,' he added, as Mr. Broadnax made his escape, 'those young people were going to elope to-night—yes, sir, elope—because they imagined that I would keep my word and my daughter as well. But they can't elope—it's absolutely impossible—the roads won't permit it—ha, ha, ha! So,' called the Squire at the top of his voice, in order that he might be heard outside, 'we will have the wedding here!'

Ivory by the Ton.

The total amount of ivory offered this year in London has been 430 tons, as compared with 371 tons last year. A single African elephant tusk, which weighed 160 pounds, was purchased by an American for $25, his intention being to place the tusk on exhibition at the Columbus Exposition. In nine years 4,070 tons of ivory, valued at about $9,750, has been sold in the London and Liverpool markets.

Musicians on Musicians.

Mendelssohn on Wagner: 'A talented dilettante.' Weber on Beethoven: 'Not quite ready for the lunatic asylum.' Handel on Gluck: 'He knows no more of counterpoint than my cook.'

Wagner on Schumann: 'He has a certain tendency toward greatness.' Beethoven on Weber: 'He never could attain more than the art of pleasing.'

Schumann on Wagner: 'Wagner is, to tell the truth, no musician. His music is hollow, disagreeable and often amateurish.'

Not That Kind of a Re-lic.

The widow of a distinguished professor was visited by a rather stabby-gentled sort of a gentleman, who expressed great admiration for her deceased husband, and who finally said: 'I revere the memory of your husband, and would like very much to have some relic to keep and cherish.'

'The only relic I can offer you,' replied the disconsolate widow; sighing heavily, 'is myself. If you will love and cherish me for his sake you may, for I am of an affectionate disposition.'

But the relic hunter had silently stolen away before she could finish the sentence.

An Unsatisfactory Witness.

A small Scotch boy was summoned to give evidence against his father who was accused of making a disturbance in the street. Said the bailie to him; 'Come my wee mon, speak the truth, and let us know all ye ken about this affair.'

'Weel, sir, said the lad, 'd'ye ken Inverness street? 'I do laddie, replied his Lordship. 'Weel, ye gang along it and turn into the square and across the square—'

'Yes, yes,' said the bailie encouragingly. 'And when ye gang across the square ye turn to the right and up into High street, and keep on up High street till ye come to a pump.' 'Quite right, my lad; proceed,' said his Worship. 'I know the old pump well.' 'Weel,' said the boy with the most infantile simplicity, 'ye may gang and pump it, for ye'll no pump me.'

Teeth to Match the Complexion.

It is a fact that is not generally known that false teeth have to be made to suit the complexion, if satisfactory results are desired. A dentist walking on Chestnut street yesterday called attention to this fact as he passed a lady who in smiling showed a beautiful set of the whitest teeth. Those teeth are too white,' he said. 'She is a blonde, and ought to have bluish white teeth. A brunette can wear clear white teeth, but blondes should have bluish or cream tinted.' Then he mentioned that a friend of his had put in a set of perfectly white teeth for a lady who is very fair. He did it against his own judgment, and only after the lady insisted strongly on it. She wore the teeth a few days and went back, saying the teeth were too conspicuous. She took a daz set the second time, and they cannot be told from natural ones. In all, dentists have as many as thirty different shades in false teeth, and have to exercise much care in the selection.

Meant in Kindness.

A policeman had told two old vagabonds sitting on a bench in Union Square to move on and as I followed them towards Fourteenth street one of them said to the other:

'Jim, I think he meant us kindly.'

'Yes, I think he do.'

'He knows that we'd be apt to sit there until we got a chill, and then pneumonia and death might follow.'

'That's it.'

'Whereas, if he tells us to move on we keep our blood circulating, avoid all danger, and are spared to our friends and the world.'

'That's correct.'

'Which is very kind of him, indeed, Jim, and if it so happen that we meet again we'll impress it on his mind that we know how to impress it on his mind that we know how to feel grateful, even if we be a high toned nor rich.—New York World.

Mrs. L. Squire, Ontario Steam Dye Works, Toronto, says: 'For about 30 years I have doctor'd for Liver Complaint and I have desisted from getting any cure. I then tried Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and the benefits I have received from this medicine are such that I cannot withhold this expression of my gratitude. It acts immediately on the liver. As a Dyspepsia remedy I don't think it can be equalled.'

How to Wash Flannels. Here are seven rules for the proper wash of flannels: 1. Use warm water in which sufficient soap has been dissolved. 2. Wash thoroughly in this. 3. Rinse in clear, warm water twice. 4. Wring out and shake well to clear off all soap. 5. Dry quickly. 6. Do not let the flannels remain in the water either before or after washing. 7. Do not use soda or any washing powder.

There is nothing that vexes the soul of the careful mother of a household more than the careful shrinkage in flannels. Unless carefully washed they are most expensive summer luxury, and yet there is no bleaching agent to her partial eyes than her flannel. With good management a suit of flannels may last a long time before reaching the inevitable scanty stage.

To Make Chocolate Blanc-Mange. Blanc-Mange may be made firm by the use of gelatin, Irish moss, sea-moss farina, corn-starch, or arrowroot. The cheapest of these thickenings are corn-starch and sea-moss farina. The latter, being the more delicate, may be used in preference to corn-starch. Put one quart of milk in the double boiler.
