

In South America and Australia pasture is abundant and ozen of the finest quality are plentiful. Boyril is prepared from these oxen and the supply is so considerable as to enable the manufacturers to use the best materials at a nominal cost. It is prepared by a special process, which ensures the retention of both the stimulating and the nourishing properties of the beef, thereby differing from ordinary meat extracts or beef tea, which merely stimulate without nourishing. The effect of stimulants is transitory; a mere flicker of energy purchased at the price of greater fatigue.

CHAPTER XV.

Kenneth was deeply touched by this evidence of the young girl's gratitude to and her regard for him, and an answering thrill of tenderness and affection swelled up in his own heart for her. He was greatly disappointed that she had left the country—or was about to leave it—for her note had been dated the day before, and it said "tomorrow." He looked at his new gift to ascertain He looked at his new gift to ascertain

It told him that it was nearly twelve o'clock, and he knew that at least two steamers for Europe were about starting from their piers, and doubtless she was of them.

He would not have had time to reach her and thank her for the delicate act of kindness, even if he had known the

He sighed heavily and felt greatly depressed; it seemed as if his was was hopelessly hedged in.
But that afternoon he left the office earlier than usual, and bent his steps - avenue to ascertain if Miss Kavanagh had remained in the ountry.

He found the residence dismantled and empty, while there were placards in the windows announcing that the place was for sale, and to whom to apply for information. Kenneth went directly to the formation. Kenneth went directly to the broker's office, determined to follow the matter up, now that he had undertaken it, and there he learned that Miss Kavanagh had been a resident of England for a number of years, although previous to that she had lived in New York. She had returned to America early in he spring of that year to dispose of some property that until now had been rented; she had spent the intervening months in travel and sight-seeing with her niece, and had now returned to England to reside permanently. Kenneth felt almost discouraged upon learning this, for now it seemed almost impossible that he could ever learn anything more about himself, and yet he was impressed that Katherine Kavanagh was in some way connected with his past, or at least that she knew something of his birth and early history.

"If I had the means I would follow her England, or even to the ends of the earth, if it was necessary, and compel her to divulge what she knows," he told himself, as he wended his way dejectedly towards his boarding-place. "I ought to have sought her immediately after re-ceiving her note and demanded an exeeting me that day on board the ferry oat, and also of the fact of the similarity in the writing of those two communications. Now I doubt if I could find her even if I should go to England, for the broker did not know her address, as

A strange yearning for that sweet girl whom he had saved came over him, and he rebelled almost angrily against the thought that they might never meet from that time the precious gift which she had sent him was treasured as the dearest thing in his possession. He wore it constantly, and although he never made any parade of it he was very proud of it, and regarded it almost superproud of it, and regarded it almost superstitiously as some sacred talisman which might bring him some good in the future.

He never had a suspicion, however, that it might be the instrument of some overwhelming calamity to him; but such was the case, nevertheless.
In the same office with him there was a young man about his own age.
He was the only son and heir of a wealthy gentleman who was an intimate friend of Mr. Stark, the publisher and

These feelings had betrayed themselves in connection with Kenneth ever since Reynolds entered the publishing house, while a mean spirit of jealousy had been manifested because of Kenneth's superior erary attainments and position in the his young man was an intimate friend This young man was an intimate friend of Laurence Fane, a promising fellow, of whom we have spoken before as an admirer of Alice Sherman; though what the two could find in common was a matter of wonder to all who knew them, for Laurence Fane was the type of all that was generous, manly and noble, while Egbert Reynolds was known to be rather ast, and was sometimes concerned in matters of a rather questionable nature. As has been stated, Kenneth had been with Mr. Stark ever since he was twelve ears of age. He had always conductel mself in such an honorable, straightforward way, and shown so much in-terest and diligence in the business, that he had become a great favorite with that gentleman, who had steadily promoted him and done everything that he could to advance his interests, and now it had even been hinted to him that he might hope to become junior partner in the great publishing house at the beginning of the new year.

Already his name, as a reporter and talented letter writer, were beginning to the new year.

Reynolds' keen eyes espied it instantly, and he regarded the costly affair in amazement, for he knew that Kenneth had hitherto carried a very cheap silver watch, and could ill afford, with his moderate salary, to purchase one so expensive, while, too, he saw that his chain was in keeping with the watch. He knew, too, that he had no friends or relatives who would be likely to give him so valuable a present, and his curiosity was at once piqued to ascerain how he came by it.

"It is a quarter past eleven," Kenneth at last replied, opening the case and glancing at the time.
"Um—got a new watch, haven't you?" questioned him companion.
"Yes," Kenneth returned, with a preoccupied air, as he replaced it in his nolds, reaching out to take it.

"Excuse me." Kenneth responded, feel-"Excuse me." Kenneth responded, feeling just a trifle irritated at being interrupted, "I am very busy with this article; it must be in the printer's hands within an hour. Some other time," and he went steadily on with his work, his pen literally flying over the pages as he

Egbert Reynolds frowned darkly because his request was disregarded, and he bent a suspicious look upon Kenneth. All at once he gave a slight start, sat in thoughtful silence for a few moments, then, giving vent to a prolonged whistle, he arose and abruptly left the room. [To be Continued.]

about acceptance only until he is assured that Pittsburg is not going to put the Michigan city out of the baseball business. Burns and Fred Raymer, the latter with Los Angeles, are regarded as the two of the best infielders at the coast.

Frank Reisling, the new manager of the Toledo Club, was expelled from the Connecticut League at its meeting recently. He was accused of attempting to induce players to jump the Connecticut League and join the American Association. This action will bar him from playing with any league governed by the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs. Subsequently the league ratified the board's action and expelled Reisling by unanimous vote.

HOCKEY.

WATFORD ORGANIZED. At the annual meeting of the Wat ford Hockey Club on Saturday night the question of joining the O. H. A. was discussed. The sentiment of the meeting was not favorable to joining the association unless more satisfactory arrangements can be made than prevailed last season. Should a western group be formed consisting of Ingersoll, London, Strathroy and any other point that would constitute a compact district, Watford would be willing to enter. The secretary was instructed to communicate.

HERN WITH THE PITTSBURGS. Stratford, Nov. 22.—"Riley" Hern has signed a contract to guard the nets for the Pittsburg Keystones this winter, in which position he won no little distinction last season. Eddie Santry, the Chicago scrapper, has agreed to meet Ryan, Nov. 29, at 128 pounds before the Crescent A. C. The Toronto club has been trying to get an opponent for Ryan for some weeks. The matchmaker desired to get Jack McClelland, because of the bitter rivalry between these two feathereights, but the Pittsburg lad absolutely refused to meet Ryan. He wired the Toronto club:

"You will have to get Callahan for me, or the bout is off. Will not men In Santry the club has secured a boxer who is well know, and with a reputation of always being able to give an account of himself, and it is fortunate that Ryan has been training at the Henley gymnasium, since he re-turned from Philadelphia, and is thus in good condition for so hard a proposition as Santry. Ryan will leave for Toronto, the first of the week, where he will finish his training under the care
