"The rules of the school require that when a child reports a case of illness in the family the teachers shall find out whether such illness is contagious or not, and it is usually necessary to send the pupil home for a statement of acts. One of my charges was a small boy of whom I was very fond, because of his unusual intelligence for so young a pupil. One morning

I did not notice him in his seat. I asked the other children if they knew why be was absent, and I learned that his mother was ill a-bed. Later the boy himself came to school and reported that his mamma was sick, but it wasn't catching. That won't do,' I replied. 'You must go home and find out, then tell me just what is the matter with your mamma.' Pretty soon the boy came toddling back into the room. "Teacher,' said he, "mamma says it's all right.
