Dorothy Dix Says "It's More Blessed To Give Than To Receive."

Love for Her Husband Is the Only Thing That Makes the Sacrifices of Marriage Worth While to the Average Woman-So She Who Marries Man She Loves Is Happiest of Wives.

A correspondent asks this question: "Is it better for a woman to marry the man she loves or the man who red hair men have been the lovers and have done the courting.

Of course, the proper answer to this query is neither, or both. Do not marry until you find a man who loves you and whom you love. But in a case where a choice has to be made between the two, I should unhesitatingly say that it is better for the woman to marry the man she loves, than it is for her to marry the man who

At first blush, not many women will agree to this proposition. They will say that a woman's greatest need is the need of love. That without love she hungers, and thirsts, and perishes no matter what else gives her.

Furthermore, that it is a wo man's prerogative to be adored and have incense burnt before her, and that ever since the cave man ed his lady love with a club and dragged her to his home by her lovely

Therefore they hold that if, in marriage, "one kisses and the other submits to being kissed," as the French say the man should be the kisser and the woman the kissed.

They believe that where a woman has to content herself with a half loaf, she best secures her happiness by taking a husband who is perfectly crazy about her; who is in a perpetual state of blessing Lady Luck for having given him his heart's desire in a wife, and who is content to eat out of her hand such scraps of affection as she condescends to feed him.

I disagree with this theory. It is just because love is the most important thing in a woman's life that it is absolutely necessary for her to have an overwhelming passion for the man she marries, if she is to find happiness and contentment.

A man who has a vital interest in his career, the excitement for th struggle for power and money, the thousand distractions of the great world to take his mind off his domestic affairs, can get along with a wife whom he respects and who makes him comfortable, but for whom he entertains only a lukewarm regard.

But a woman cannot meet a situation like that philosophically. Her emotions make her life. What she feels is of more interest to her than what she does. She cannot substitute liking for loving any more than she can water for wine. And no matter how much she admires the man to whom she is married, no matter how grateful she is to him for his kindness to her, unless he can raise a thrill in her breast everything is cinders ashes and dust to her. She feels that she has missed the best thing in life, the thing she most wanted; and she is restless and dissatisfied, and is forever on a still hunt to find her real soul mate.

To the average woman, marriage is a state of perpetual sacrifice. Sh must go through the agony of bearing children, and the long, weary years of ceaseless care and anxiety in rearing them. She must work harder than any hireling at the dull and monotonous task of cooking and cleaning and scrubbing and sewing and mending that it takes to make a comfortabl

And the only thing on earth that can make all of this worth while is love for her husband. That sets a star in her sky. That gilds the humblest task. The woman who stands over a stove cooking a dinner for the husband to whom she is utterly indifferent is a slave driven to her appointed task by her sense of duty. The wo-man who stands over a stove cooking dinner for a husband she adores is a priestess making a burnt offering of herself on the altar

The woman who marries the man she loves is never bored, and bore dom is the particular curse of the feminine sex. She throws herself hear and soul into her husband's interests, and is more eager for his success than he is himself. She is never dull, because the smallest thing that concerns him is of more import to her than the events that shake the great outer world. She can find food for thought and scope for her activ ties in the fact that her husband likes onions with his beefsteak or prefer mushrooms. Her days are filled with pleasurable excitement in preparing for his homecoming of an evening, and when she hears his key in the late her heart strikes up "Hail to the King."

The woman who marries the man she loves is never dissatisfled, never disgruntled. He may be a poor thing, but he is her own, the one she cut out of the bunch and which she marked with her own brand. Having got the one thing she wanted most, she can well afford to pity her poor sisters who have only limousines and pearls and the merely tolerated husbands who are the purveyors

Of course the woman who loves her husband better than he does he has her moments of acute jealousy, but even these are thrilled with pep and are better than the dull stagnation of having a man that you don't take the trouble to lock up at night because you know you can't lose him

Truly, it is more blessed to give than to receive, and it is better DOROTHY DIX. Copyright, 1924, by Public Ledger Company

Paul Von Markey, Concert Artist, Is Resting at Home of Louis Belagh.

Pianists of the really first rank who ome to London are few and far bethe demand that the price at least of such genius must be a recital before the artist leaves the city. Paul von Markey, formerly of Budapest, and teacher in the musical cademy there, is a guest with Mr. outs Belagh, of 502 Richmond street, well-known London musician and the organist at St. Peter's Cathedral. He is one of the many who find Europe in chaos, a most suitable background for their art. A ountry run riot with economical and ndustrial disturbance is not in the nood for the reflective genius of great masters. And so many of the master musicians of Europe, men who have inherited the genius of Lizt, Mozart, Beethoven, and others, re bringing their art to a new forld, to plant artistic seed in a ew and fertile soil. Mr. von Markey is in London olely for a rest, but he does hope to make his home on this continent. He is still in the early twenties, but it does not need a musician to and that his playing ranks with that of any of the great artists who have ome to this country. The fact that to has mastered 200 works of the reat masters speaks for itself. He ame to Canada on the completion of a sixteen weeks' tour of Central Europe, but will be no more before the public until the fall of the year, when arrangements for his tours have been made by one of the large American bureaus. That is, he will play no more in public, unless he can be persuaded to give a recital in London before YOUR GUESTS WILL BE

Mr. von Markey has a pronounced opinion on one American institution, that of "jazz." He is not in the east alarmed about it, any more than temporary craze. His faith in the musical expression of those who are now known as the old masters is such that it is not shaken by the oresent tendency to neglect them, and he has supreme confidence in their power to emerge superior when the outbreak of jazz has died down.

An interesting gathering of extondoners took place at Griffith Park, Los Angeles, Cal., on Sunday, March 9, when it was decided to organize a London Club. Over fifty were present at the gathering, some is rather nice to serve some cheese following dinner, and as I think up each dish I will explain why, in my opinion, it is a good dish to have. She was saying—"Oh, I am so tired of meat and potatoes,—I wish I could think of something different." How I would have liked to have asked her to come up to my office sometime where I have any number of lovely menus and recipes. But I didn't—so I am writing this in the hope she will read it as well as all other women who wish somewell as all other women who wish somewell.

march 9, when it was decided to organize a London Club. Over fifty were present at the gathering, some of whom were but winter visitors, but many others who have taken up their permanent residence in Southern California. Lunch was served under the spreading sycamore trees, after which the decision was made to organize a London Club, the object of which will be to help newcomers meet the people from the old home town.

Ralph Slater was elected president of the club, with Mrs. Frank Webber as secretary. The following form the executive committee: Mrs. Bert Weir, Mrs. A. L. Eacrett, L. H. Hashet, Bert Weir and George Swallwell. These Londoners in far-away California send word that they are daily readers of The London Advertiser, from which they receive all the news from home.

Main the salad of the dessert is omitted, it is rather nice to serve some cheese and crackers with the salad. As I have already said, the fish cocktail is rather nice to serve some cheese and crackers with the salad. As I have already said, the fish cocktail is rather nice to serve some cheese and crackers with the salad. As I have already said, the fish cocktail is rather nice to serve some cheese and crackers with the salad. As I have already said, the fish cocktail is a good dish, as it eliminates the necessity of hot fish. The soup can be prepared early in the day and the guests.

A roast is the best kind of meat, as it can be cooked and then placed in the oven with the gas turned low, where it will keep perfectly hot, and yet, if the guests are reasonably prompt, will not be too dry. I speak of hashed and creamed potatoes, or mashed, because they are the only kinds which are not absolutely ruined if they have to stand a while and be re-heated. The cream for the creamed potatoes should not be put from which they receive all the news from home.
