

AN AUTHORITY ON THE FRUIT INDUSTRY Prof. Lake of Oregon Gives Some Advice to Okanagan Growers

Prof. E. R. Lake, of the Oregon Agricultural College, on a second visit to the Okanagan, gave his initial address to a full house at Penticon on October 10th.

Next morning on being shown some specimens of Yellow Newton Pippins grown on the farm of Arthur Mathias at Okanagan Falls, Mr. Lake pronounced them superb, and said that if Penticon could do as well there could be no better fruit to plant.

Mr. Lake began his lecture by referring to the achievement of Oregon in the growing and marketing of high class fruits. He showed how, through experiment, they had ascertained the best varieties for the various sections, how they had co-operated in growing two or three of the best for their special districts, and how they have operated in growing two or three of the best for their special districts, and how they had co-operated in grading and packing, thus securing a reputation in the best markets.

Apple Trees were usually planted in Oregon from twenty-eight to thirty-two feet apart and hexagonally instead of in square rows as was being done at Penticon.

The Oregon apples were picked in canvas covered baskets and carted in spring wagons to prevent bruising. They were then rubbed off with gloves made from crushed cloth and packed in boxes with absorbent paper between the layers.

He said that although the Okanagan has free from pests, it has a better codlin moth than any other section, and could only be kept in check by liberal spraying with arsenate of lead.

On being asked the best varieties of apples to plant the professor recommended as probably the best, the Home Beauties, Jonathans, Baldwins, and Kings. The Northern Spy was excellent but did not come into bearing until about seven years of age.

He believed the soil round Penticon was excellent, and would be a better opportunity. Too much water should not be used in irrigation as it would wash the nutrition from the soil.

A characteristic brand should be adopted by the growers of Penticon or of the entire Okanagan. This stamp should be put on all boxes containing first class fruit.

The orchards in Hood river netted one thousand dollars per acre profit to their owners and some went as high as fifteen hundred dollars. Nobody wanted to sell an orchard like that. Bees should be kept to pollinate the fruit blossoms.

WOLVES MENACE BIG GAME OF THE ISLAND Famous British Sportsmen Complete a Very Lengthy Hunting Trip

Of all the disciples of the gun and rifle who have been attracted to British Columbia, there is none whose name and reputation are better known either by reason of his prowess in the world of sport or by his literary contributions to the history of the hunt.

When he undertook the Island hunt last mentioned, Capt. Radcliffe was a very successful trip in the far north during which he traversed some fifteen thousand miles, hunting along the shores of the Bering sea and the Arctic coast.

Leaving England in March last he proceeded by way of Japan to the Kamchatka peninsula and thence across the Bering straits to Nome City, Alaska, where he remained for some time.
