AN ANNIVERSARY

FLETCHER BROS. 93 GOVERNMENT STREET Forty-Eight Years Ago Steamer Forward Landed Prominent Victorians.

Yesterday was the 48th anniversary of the arrival of the Hudson's Bay steamer Forward at Esquimalt with many prominent Victorians on board, a number of whom have passed and many still survive. Afex Wilson of this city was one of the passengers, as was the late Hon. John Robson, J. Glearline and others. Two of the graves in Quadra street cemetery are those of the steward and Captain's son of the Forward, who were killed as the result of an accident which occurred after passing Race Rocks. It was the practice to fire a cannon when rounding the Race to acquaint Victorians with the fact that a steamer was coming. The steward and the captain's son went below to get a charge of powder and it is believed they dropped a candle. An explosion and caused considerable damage. Seamen bravely rescued Mrs. Sears, whose son was then an infant in arms and the two men who were injured. A signal for a doctor was then flown and quick time was made by a medical man from Esquimalt, but his skill was unavailing, for both the steward and the captain's son succumbed.

The exploration of the Fraser river with its rapids and canyons and its nostile Indians and its unknown outlet, was no mean undertaking. Fraser came through from Athabasca, landing on the Peace river, where Fort George now stands, and this point he makes his headquarters for the exploring of the great river which he believes to be another arm of the Columbia. The spring of 1808 he left Fort George with a fictilla of cances and after many portages and much strenuous traveling arrived, as near as history is able to tell, on July 1st, on the site of the present Royal city. The portages on this river were, in many cases, long, and there were no trails through the dense forests of the Lower river, or up the crumbling cliffs, that form its banks, north of its junction with the Thompson at Lytton Besides being an epoch worthy of note to the residents of the Royal city, the
